HURLEY WITNESS AGAINST BARNEY

PROTEST BY BARNEY COUNSEL

Objection to Hurley's Testimony on Stored Autos Overruled by Court

Joseph F. Hurley took the stand in Suffolk Superior Court as a witness for the Commonwealth in the trial of Herman L. Barney and John F. Dillon for the murder of Patrolman Charles E. Deininger in Chelsea February 13, in which he is accused of being an accessory after the fact.

Strong objections by counsel for Barney against the admission of testimony by Hurley regarding cars stored in the Chelsea garage prior to the day of the murder were overruled by Judge Callahan.

Promises of startling disclosures by Hurley affecting persons who have not been mentioned in the case heretofore were made by his counsel, John F. McDonald.

POLICE QUOTE DILLON.

The story of John F. Dillon regarding his movements on the day of the murder, as he is alleged to have related it to the Charles street jail, March 5, were repeated on the stand today by Police Sergeant John M. D. Anderson of the Lagrange street station.

Anderson's version of Dillon's story for the first time places Barney at the scene of the killing. The story of Dillon, alleged to have been told by him in the presence of Sergeant Anderson, Captain Dalley of Station 1 and Dillon's attorney, Edward P. Barry, is as follows:

"I arrived at the South Station from Philadelphia on the morning of February 13 and went to the billiard room of Young's Hotel, where I played billiards until noon, when I went to a Washington street restaurant for luncheon. From there I

INJURED BY AUTO AS HE CHASED HAT

Rodney W. Leach, thirty, of No. 9 Rogers avenue, Lynn, picked up unconscious by the roadside at Nahant after he was struck by an automobile which the police have not yet identified, is on the danger list at the Lynn Hospital.

His hat blew off as he was riding in a jitney bus. He ran back to recover it and later was found unconscious in a field.

3,000 GARMENT WORKERS TO TAKE STRIKE VOTE

Benjamin Schlesinger, international president of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union of America, will arrive here tomorrow to take control of the local situation, according to Leo Robbins, secretary of the local joint board, at No. 724 Washington street. The 3,000 members will take a strike vote tomorrow morning.

TUDOR TEA

Mahon Orders Men to End Bay State Strike Today

A final warning to the striking carmen of the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company, formerly the Bay State, to return to work today or forfeit their union charters, wage agreements and all union privileges was given today at the Quincy House by President W. D. Mahon of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America.

President Mahon said that the starting of the strike by the Lowell local was illegal, that the men had broken their arbitration contract, that he (Mahon) knew nothing of the merits of the strike itself, that he would not try to obtain concessions from the company, that he had ordered the men back to work and that, if they again refused to obey, the international would "take drastic action."

Mr. Mahon gave this warning in a statement made to the press just before he went into final conference with a committee of seventeen officials of as many locals, representing the union employes of the big trolley system.

COOLIDGE AND McCONNELL ON PARK BOARD

The long-expected reorganization of the Park and Recreation Commission transpired today when Mayor Peters announced the appointment of Charles A. Coolidge, of No. 82 Marlboro street, as commissioner to replace John K. M. L. Farquhar. Mr. Coolidge is an architect.

Critcism of Mr. Farquhar's administration was made to the Mayor in reports issued by the Finance Commission.

The Mayor also appointed James E. McConnell of No. 14 Chamblet street, Dorchester, another member of the commission, to succeed David Roseman, whose term has expired. Mr. McConnell is an attorney.

CHANCELLOR LAW ASKED TO HASTEN TO PARIS

London, June 23.—Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law has been asked by Premier Lloyd George to leave at once for Paris to sign the peace treaty, Reuters' News Agency announced this afternoon. This was taken as conclusive evidence that Germany accepts the treaty.

LUNATICS IN AUSTRIA STRIKE FOR BETTER FOOD

London, June 23.—The very last word in strikes has come. Dispatches today stated that the lunatics in the great asylum at Varalberg, Austria, had gone on "strike" for better food and more of it. The dispatch failed to state whether the inmates would refuse to be crazy any more in case their demands were refused.

DERNBURG DECLARES EBERT WILL QUIT SOON

London, June 23.—A Central News dispatch from Amsterdam quotes Dr. Dernburg as declaring that the resignation of President Ebert, head of the German republic, is imminent.

DEATH AND RUIN IN PATH OF TORNADO

Fargo, N. D., June 23.—Fergus Falls, Minn., lies in ruins today and soldiers are searching the debris for the bodies of hundreds of persons reported to have been killed by a tornado which swept through the town late yesterday. Reports received here early today placed the death list at from 300 to 400. Earlier estimates gave the number of dead as about 200.

Relief trains are on their way to Fergus Falls to aid in the work of caring for the dead and injured and to give assistance to townsfolk whose homes have been demolished.

Governor Burnquist of Minnesota is in personal charge of the relief work, and is expected to reach Fergus Falls today. Members of the Sanitary Corps, Fourth Regiment, Minnesota National Guard, and a number of doctors, nurses and railway officials are giving aid to the stricken town.

The cyclone wiped out the business section of the city, cutting a path several blocks wide through the centre. Most of the larger business buildings were destroyed and many residences were blown down.

Among the buildings destroyed was the Grand Hotel in which seventy-five persons are said to have perished when the building collapsed. The Great Northern Railway Depot also is reported to have been blown down with considerable loss of life.

Passengers aboard Great Northern train No. 1, the Oriental Limited, westbound from Chicago to Seattle, escaped death almost by a miracle when the train was blown from the track, twenty miles west of Fergus Falls. Only one person aboard was injured, a girl suffering a sprained ankle. The passengers were taken to Moorehead, Minn., where other trains picked them up. More than 200 passengers were on the train.

Telegraph and telephone wires throughout the entire region swept by the cyclone are down and communication with the stricken district is interrupted.

WILKINS' WIDOW ON STAND

Sister-in-Law of Mrs. Lundgren Tells of Meeting Accused Nurse

Lawrence, June 22.—Mrs. Bessie May (Skeels) Lundgren betrayed violent emotion today when her sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Wilkins of New Jersey, took the stand to testify against her in her trial on the charge of the murder of Florence W. Gay. Mrs. Wilkins is the widow of Albert J. H. Wilkins, brother of the defendant, whom the "Sunshine Nurse" is also accused of having poisoned.

Mrs. Wilkins described the final illness of Albert J. H. Wilkins, from whom she was divorced, the sick room where Mrs. Lundgren had full sway, and the sister's apparent devotion to the dying man in whose body experts have testified more than 120 grains of sugar of lead were found.

Mrs. Wilkins said she met Mrs. Lundgren, then Mrs. Skeels, at the time of her marriage in 1902 and saw her every year until 1911. In 1918 Mrs. Lundgren looked her up in Greenville, N. J., and persuaded her to go to the death bed of her former husband.

During this testimony, which apparently caused the witness as much emotion as it did her sister-in-law, Mrs. Lundgren listened with feverish interest. When Mrs. Wilkins came to Lawrence for the trial the two women fell into each other's arm in dramatic fashion in the courtroom.

Dr. Alexander O. Gettler, the New York expert who examined the organs of the defendant's brother, Albert J. H. Wilkins of Bayonne, N. J., returned to the stand for cross-examination by Attorney Daley.

AUTHORITIES DIFFER.

Q.—How much lead did you say you found in the stomach and intestines of Albert J. Wilkins? A.—About forty-five grains.

Q.—These forty-five grains did not contribute to the cause of death, did they? A.—Most of it did not. Some of it may have re-excreted itself in the intestinal tract.

Q.—How much did you actually find? A.—About three and one-half grains in the brain and about forty grains in the stomach.

Q.—Then you found forty-three and one-half grains in all? A.—Yes, I did.

Q.—What do you consider a lethal or fatal dose of lead? A.—The authorities do not agree. Some authorities argue that less than the amount found here is a fatal dose.

Attorney-General Attwill objected to the last question and was sustained on the ground that the witness had not testified.

Q.—Did you say this was the first

BEGIN MAN HUNT FOR GERMANS

Believed 10,000 of Them Had a Hand in Sinking the Fleet at Scapa Flow

London, June 23.—Many of the Germans concerned in the sinking of their fleet at Scapa Flow are still at large, according to a dispatch to the Star today, from Thurso, a small watering place on the north coast of Scotland. A man hunt is being conducted through the surrounding country.

According to the Thurso correspondent ten thousand Germans had a hand in the fleet's destruction.

Paris, June 23.—The British Admiralty was openly charged with neglect in permitting the sinking of the German fleet off Scapa Flow, by French newspapers today.

The French papers recalled the fact that France had laid claim to the battle cruisers and light cruisers forming part of the interned German fleet and declared that compensation is due France for their loss.

"Great Britain's responsibility is heavy," declared the Journal. "We cannot forget that Britain wanted the fleet sunk. An unbelievable accum-

TROTZKY ORDERS ALL BOLSHEVIKI MOBILIZED

Washington, June 23.—Orders for "mobilization without exception" by Bolshevik forces have been issued by Trotzky, according to Helsingfors advices, quoting the Nordiska Press Centralen, reaching the State Department this afternoon. Even the employes of the communistic bureau of the government are included. In the recent action at Kranonja the town changed hands three times, finally being taken by the Esthonians, along with 600 prisoners, 700 horses and 300 machine guns.

FIRE CAUSES $85,000 DAMAGE IN LOWELL

Lowell, June 23.—Fire in the building of the Northern Waste Company at Warrenville destroyed property to the value of $85,000 today. It caused a second alarm. Firemen were handicapped by lack of water, but prevented a spread to the dismantled Newton ammunition works in another part of the building. An electric fuse in an elevator shaft is said to have caused the fire.

REPORT GERMANS WILL FIGHT POLES

By Exclusive Cable to the International News Service from the London Daily Express.

Berlin, June 23.—The Freiheit today reveals details of an alleged plot against the German government. General Louverbeck, the Freiheit declares, is collecting a large force in Eastern Germany and is determined to fight the Poles, despite new orders from the government.

$14,544,610,212 Spent by U. S. During War Period

By International News Service.

Washington, June 23.—The War Department expended during the war period and until June 1 last a total of $14,544,610,212, out of a total authorized appropriation of $24,617,626,070, Secretary Baker today reported to the special House committee investigating department expenditures.

Details of expenditures insofar as possible were given by the secretary, but he announced inability at this time to give names and addresses of all contractors under the War Department.

Riots have occurred at Turin, Milan and Florence. Public opinion is reported growing hostile to the new ministry headed by Francesco Nitti.

FOSS GIVES HIS MITE TO IRISH VICTORY FUND

Former Governor Eugene N. Foss, in making a contribution to the Irish Victory Fund, expressed his support of the efforts of Americans of Irish blood to establish Ireland as a free and independent nation in the following letter:

June 20, 1919.

Mr. Daniel F. O'Connell,
32 State street, Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. O'Connell:—

Pleased to add my mite to the Irish Fund, and how it is.

I have no blooded American sorrier than I am to the idea of freedom for Ireland.

We gave our part in the world war that democracy might be safe, not alone for ourselves, but for every aspiring nation. Sincerely yours,

FINNERAN WOULD AMEND STATE LIQUOR LAWS

Coincident with the announcement of sales of stock by liquor dealers, Francis J. Finneran, president of the State Democratic Club, today gave notice of his intention to petition for an amendment to the State liquor laws to remove the ten days' advertising clause. He pointed out that should President Wilson repeal wartime prohibition, the dealers would be forced to close their doors for several days as publication of the first applications was begun for the first time today. Under the law ten days must elapse before the license commissioners can take action on such applications.

ALLIED CHIEFS GET OFFICIAL NOTICE

Paris, June 23.—The time for the signing of the treaty of peace with Germany has been fixed between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The day probably will be Thursday, the Exchange Telegraph reports.

London, June 23 (5:59 p. m.)—It is officially announced that Germany will sign the peace treaty. The announcement was issued from Downing street, the official residence of Premier Lloyd George.

The announcement said that Germany had decided to sign the treaty.

Paris, June 23.—Premier Clemenceau, president of the Peace Conference, has been notified from Weimar that the Germans will sign the peace treaty, it was officially announced this afternoon.

"Big 4" Refuse to Extend Time of Ultimatum or Change Terms of Treaty

Paris, June 23 (11:20 a. m.)—The "Big Four" have just refused a request from the German government for a forty-eight-hour extension of the ultimatum, expiring tonight. The new German request arrived shortly before 3 o'clock this morning. The allied leaders were summoned to Lloyd George's house. Discussion of the request for delay lasted about eight hours.

In anticipation of official word of Germany's decision to sign before the expiration of the allied ultimatum tonight, arrangements are going forward at Versailles for the actual ceremony of signing. The German decision will be telegraphed here from Weimar and handed to the allies by the secretary of the German peace delegation, who remained at Versailles.

Despite this feeling of absolute confidence that the Germans will sign, Marshal Foch's preparations for the

Italy Charged With Sending Guns to Hungarian Reds

Paris, June 23.—The sensational charge that Italy deliberately sent guns and supplies to Bela Kun, head of the Hungarian Red government, for use against the Czechs and to further Italy's policy of antagonism against the Slavs, was made by Commander Pertinax in today's issue of the Echo de Paris.

The article by Pertinax was not submitted to the French censor, it is stated. It created considerable comment in peace conference circles.

A Berlin correspondent of the International News Service cabled a week ago that he had been told by a Hungarian Red leader that the Italians were secretly furnishing war materials to the Hungarians.

WILSON PACKS UP; ALL READY FOR HIS RETURN

Paris, June 23.—President Wilson's baggage was packed up today and everything made ready for his departure for New York immediately after the signing of the treaty.

SEARCHERS FOR LIQUOR MUST HAVE WARRANTS

Washington, June 23.—Private premises or business places may not be searched for liquor under the prohibition enforcement act without an order by a court, it was decided today by the House Judiciary Committee which is framing the measure. Prohibition leaders had asked that the bill provide for search warrants, to be issued on the affidavits of two responsible persons.

advance into Germany did not relax today, and American military headquarters was alive with activity. The Veteran First and Second Divisions of General Pershing's forces are ready to begin the advance toward Cassel on a moment's notice.

The Germans allege that they were unable to reach a final decision with respect to the peace treaty without further time. President Wilson, Premier Lloyd George and Premier Clemenceau found themselves in absolute unanimity in the decision to refuse the respite.

It was authoritatively stated that the allied reply was couched in the sharpest terms and again warned the Germans of the consequences if they failed to sign before the expiration of the ultimatum.

DUPLICITY IN SCUTTLING.

The scuttling of the German fleet by German crews at Scapa Flow was accepted as absolute proof of German duplicity and was cited by allied leaders in the morning conference as a further reason why no tempering should be allowed.

A report reached here that the Germans might not send another peace delegation to Versailles, but would instruct the secretary of the old delegation, who is now at Versailles, to sign the treaty.

In conference circles it was declared quite unlikely that the allies would permit any such procedure. It was said that they would adhere to the precedent established during the armistice negotiations, when they flatly refused to negotiate with any second-raters.

It is expected that another sharp note of warning will be sent to the German government if a new delegation is named and "second-rate" be representative of the German people.

GERMANS' FINAL PLEAS.

In the notes received from the German government last night and to which the allies immediately dispatched negative replies, the German government "engages to fulfill the conditions of peace," but said:

"It (the German republic) desires, however, in this solemn moment to express itself with unreserved clearness in order to meet in advance any accusation of untruthfulness that may now or later be made against Germany.

"They conditions imposed exceed the measure of that which Germany can in fact perform. The government of the German republic, therefore, feels itself bound to announce that it makes all reservations and declines all responsibility as regards the consequences which may be threatened against Germany, when, as is bound to happen, the impossibility of carrying out the conditions comes to light, even though German capacity to fulfill is stretched to the utmost."

The German government then follows with a statement declining to recognize Germany's sole responsibility for the war and declining to recognize the right of the allies to impose burdens upon her on the score of responsibility.

REFUSE TO GIVE UP KAISER.

It further declares it impossible for a German to reconcile it with his dignity and honor to accept and execute Articles 227 to 230 by which Germany is required to give up to the allied and associated powers for trial individuals among the German people who are accused by the allied and associated powers of the breach of international law and of committing acts contrary to the elementary rules of war.

The German government also protests against the taking away of her colonial possessions "and against the reasons given therefore which permanently deny to Germany fitness for colonial activity."

The German government, the note adds, believes itself to be entitled to address the following modest request to the allied and associated governments in the expectation that the allied and associated governments will consider that following declaration as an integral part of the treaty:

"Within two years, counting from the day when the treaty is signed, the allied and associated governments will submit the question of admission to the high council of the powers as constituted by the League of Nations, according to Article 1, for the purpose of subsequent examination.

"EQUAL RIGHTS" DEMANDED.

"Before this high council the German plenipotentiaries are to enjoy the same rights and privileges as the representatives of the other contracting powers of the present treaty. This council shall decide in regard to those conditions of the present treaty which impair the rights of self-determination of the German people and also in regard to the stipulation whereby the free economic development of Germany on a footing of equal rights is impeded.

"The government of the German republic accordingly gives the declaration of its consent, as required by the note of June 16, 1919, in the following form:

"The government of the German republic is ready to sign the treaty of peace without, however, recognizing thereby that the German people was the author of the war and responsibility for delivering persons in accordance with Articles 227 to 230 of the treaty of peace."

GERMAN PLEA FOR DELAY.

The text of the German note requesting an extension of forty-eight hours' time follows:

"The excellency the President of the Peace Conference, Mr. Clemenceau:

"Mr. President, the Minister for Foreign Affairs instructs us to beg the allied and associated governments in replying for forty-eight hours the time limit for answering our excellency's note communicated yesterday evening and, likewise the time limit for answering the note of June 16, 1919.

"It was only on Saturday, after great difficulty, that a new cabinet was formed which, unlike its predecessor, could come to an agreement to declare its willingness to sign the treaty as regards nearly all its provisions. The National Assembly has expressed its confidence in this cabinet by a large majority of votes. The answer only arrived here just before midnight, at the direct wire from Versailles to Weimar was out of order. The government must come into contact anew with the National Assembly, in order to take the grievous decision, which is still required of it in such a manner as it can only be taken in accordance with Democratic principles and with the international situation in Germany.

"Accept, Mr. President, the assurance of my distinguished consideration. (Signed) VON HANIEL."

"IMPOSSIBLE," SAYS CLEMENCEAU

The allied reply was very brief. Its text follows:

"Mr. President:

"The allies and associated governments beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication on June 23. After full consideration of your request they regret that it is not possible to extend the time already granted to your excellency to make known your decision relative to the signature of the treaty without any reservation.

(Signed) "G. CLEMENCEAU."

Germany's Final Manoeuvres Before Signing the Treaty

Asked allies to include Germany's denial of war responsibility in the treaty. Request refused.

Asked allies to nullify provision for handing over of authors of the war for trial. Request refused.

Protested against stripping Germany of her colonies. Protest ignored.

Asked allies to agree to a revision of the treaty by the League of Nations within two years. Request refused.

Notified allies, that, though she signs the treaty, Germany cannot possibly fulfill its conditions. Notification ignored.

Asked Allies at 3 o'clock this morning to grant forty-eight hours more time. Allies refused request and notified Germany that the armistice ends tonight.

Bauer Government by Assembly Vote, 237 to 138, Is Authorized to Sign

Weimar, June 23.—By a vote of 237 to 138—a majority of 99 votes—the national assembly here gave the new government the mandate to sign the treaty of peace as it stands. The Democrats voted almost solidly against signing.

The new ministry, headed by Gustav Bauer, formed late Saturday afternoon is for the acceptance without conditions and is expected to send a new peace delegation to Versailles at once to sign the pact.

The head of the delegation is with Dr. Hermann Mueller, the majority socialist leader who is forging ministries in the new government. The democrats refused representation in the new government which is composed therefore only of socialists and centrists.

Proof that the government is irreconcilably resigned to the necessity of accepting the terms as they stand is seen in the fact that the portfolio of the colonial minister has been cancelled.

Thus for the first time since Germany spread her "sphere of influence" across the sea and entered upon colonial expansion she has today a government without a colonial minister.

Dr. Matthias Erzberger, the Centrist (Catholic) leader, is vice-president and minister of finance in the new cabinet.

Alexander Schlicks (Socialist) succeeds Herr Bauer as Minister of Labor.

Herr Meyer (Socialist) is Minister of Demobilization.

Gustav Noske retains his portfolio as Minister of National Defence.

Hilsberts (Socialist) remains Minister of Posts and Telegraphs.

The assembly met at noon. Premier Bauer mounted the rostrum and began his address amid tense silence.

"This is a moment of life and death under the threatening invasion of the enemy," he said. "I raise for the last time in free Germany a protest against this peace of blight and annihilation, a protest against this insult of the principle of self-determination, a protest against this enslaving of the German people, against this new kind of world peace."

He added that the treaty does not lose its annihilating details by the amendments recently made by the allies and told the assembly it is impracticable to guard its fulfilment.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE.

The vote of confidence in his ministry and the vote in favor of signing the treaty followed the address. There was no lengthy discussion.

The resolution in favor of signing the treaty carried no reservations, but some of the delegates voting for it explained they only understood the resolution meant that the cabinet was empowered, by the resolution, to make the acceptance of the treaty conditional.

The opponents of the treaty declared the powers of the republican deliberately omitted all conditions and stipulations in order to win the votes of the Independent Socialists, who probably would have refused to vote any resolution that did not declare for a signature without condition.

Dr. Heil, who was first slated to become a member of the new ministry, without portfolio, was later assigned to the post of Minister of National Communications. He will wind up the affairs of the colonial office.

Bauer Cabinet, Lacking Minister of Colonies, Committed to Signing

Weimar, June 22 (Delayed).—The new German Cabinet, headed by Premier Bauer, is committed to signing the peace treaty without condition. It is significant that the post of Minister of Colonies was cancelled, Germany losing her colonies by the treaty of peace.

In the Herman Mueller, the new foreign minister, is not likely to go to Versailles to sign the peace treaty. Instead, it was stated today, he will wire Dr. Haniel von Hamspausen of the German peace delegation at Versailles to give official notice to the allies that Germany is ready to sign. He will ask that a copy of the treaty be sent to his office in Berlin for signature.

MAIL CARRIERS TO SEEK $2,500 SALARY

Taunton, June 23.—The Massachusetts Letter Carriers' Association in annual reunion here among the resolutions adopted a resolution advocating a maximum salary of $2,500 for letter carriers, a minimum salary of $2,000 and compensation of 90 cents per hour for substitute carriers. Another would allow all carriers to be eligible to promotion. These officers were elected:

Timothy J. McKeague of Haverhill, president; William E. Carney of Boston, vice-president; M. H. Powers of Lowell, secretary; Joseph J. McMahon of Springfield, treasurer; Arthur J. Carey of Worcester, delegate to the national convention.

SPLIT IN ALLIED RANKS HAS WIDENED

Disgruntled Little Nations Banding Against Big Five —Bitter Towards Italy

By a Staff Correspondent of Universal Service.

Paris, June 23.—Into the general feeling of optimism that has been created by the last forty-eight hours' news from Weimar a note of gloom is injected by the apparent widening of the split in the allied ranks, all the disgruntled little nations banding together in a formidable unit against the "big five," especially against Italy.

Premier Bratiano of Rumania is undergtood to be the leader in this movement to have Greece, Poland, Rumania, Serbia and others break away from the Peace Congress and affaign themselves against the five big powers as well as the League of Nations until, as they term it, they are given a "square deal."

This sensational step was actually planned for three weeks ago, and would have come to pass but for the influence of Eleutherios Venizelos, the Greek Premier, who counselled "watchful waiting" for a short time.

However, the rift is widening and the situation is approaching a crisis for these main reasons:

1. The Italian attitude on the Dalmatian question as against the Jugo-Slavs and Serbs and accumulating charges that Italy is giving aid and comfort to the Austro-German armies now fighting the Jugo-Slavs.

2. Open hostilities by Italy against Greece in occupying certain Balkan regions.

3. The "big four's" settlement of the Upper Silesian question contrary to Poland's demands.

4. Rumania's bitter hostility to the "big four's" agreement as the Rumanians see it "to go over the heads of individual small nations and take care of small religious and political bodies within those nations."

Already there are rumblings here of immediate war against Italy by this proposed new entente of small nationalities.

FREE INSURANCE FOR MILLBURY WORKERS

Millbury, June 23.—Agent A. C. Neff of the Millbury Mills has announced that the company has made a gift to all the employes of insurance policies, varying in amounts from $900 to $1,800, depending upon the number of years of employment.

Those employed more than one and less than two years get $900; two and less than three, $1,000; three and less than four, $1,100; four and less than five, $1,200; and five or over, $1,500.

BANKS SELL $12,000,000 INSURANCE IN 11 YEARS

The savings bank life insurance system came into being eleven years ago today, June 22, 1908, the first policy was issued under the law which permits State savings banks to write insurance for small amounts on the lives of Massachusetts residents.

Nearly $12,000,000 of insurance is now in force under this system, representing more than 24,000 policyholders.

WOMEN SUE WORCESTER LINE FOR INJURIES

Two suits, each for $5,000, have been filed against the Worcester Consolidated Street Railway Company by Malvina Charrette and Alma Cormier, both of Marlboro. They allege that they were injured when a collision of cars occurred near Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester.

Drinks 15 Pints of Jamaica Ginger In 24 Hours

Bangor, Me., June 23.—Aside from the fact that he nearly beat his wife to death, John Lerrio of this city succeeded in establishing a record by consuming one of the popular substitutes for liquor in this community where records of this character are long-standing. Lerrio's record is drinking fifteen pints of Jamaica ginger in twenty-four hours, according to his own admission to the police. He paid $15 for the fifteen pints.

Lerrio's violent thirst was aroused by a sentence of seven months in jail which he has just completed for liquor selling. After consuming the fifteen pints, he is alleged to have beaten his wife into insensibility and the police claim that her life was saved by their timely arrival and breaking down the front door.

ANTI-CATHOLIC TALK SCORED BY MALONEY

Protests Against Misrepresentation on New State Educational Bill

Charging that anonymous circulars have been spread broadcast throughout the State misrepresenting the attitude of the Catholic Church on the bill establishing a State Department of Education, Representative David J. Maloney vigorously attacked the statements contained in the circulars before the House Ways and Means Committee today. He said:

"I object to the misleading literature carried on throughout the State that the Catholic Church is against public education, for that is far from the truth. I can draw from the circular. Frankly, I do not believe any such thing.

"I want to say further that not one voice has ever been raised against parochial schools or private schools before the committee of education. Our position is this, we believe that if any group, Catholic or Protestant, is not obeying the educational laws of this State, it should be compelled to obey those laws.

"This anonymous propaganda charges that this measure has been camouflaged. Certain changes have been made in this measure by the committee, but I want to say these changes have been made not because of any fear of this propaganda, but because the members of the committee felt that these changes should be made in the interests of the Commonwealth.

"Under the bill as changed, the commissioner of education shall be the administrative and executive officer of the department of education, and subject to the approval by, and appeal to, the board of education, consisting of nine members, shall have certain, well-defined duties and powers."

Mr. Mahoney, who is in charge of the measure for the Committee on Education, stated that statements had been made in relation to the bill by the Knights of Columbus paper published at Springfield, which were not facts. He said candor compelled him to make such a statement, although he is a member of the order.

COMMITTEE PASSES UP PROBE OF COAL PRICE

The House Committee on Social Welfare gave up its task today of trying to find what has caused the recent increases in the price of coal, and in a report recommended that this investigation should be carried on by a commission whose work would extend over the period of a year. It was suggested by the committee that this could be done by the Commission, recommended by Governor Coolidge, to investigate the high cost of living, but changes in the personnel of this commission are sought by the committee.

ulation of mistakes made the scuttling possible. Article 23 of the armistice did not preclude the presence of an allied guard aboard these ships."

"The allies doubtless will recognize that compensation is due to France," said the Petit Journal. "France must retain the submarines entrusted to her keeping and should receive no blame if she retains a number of merchant ships."

British Fleet at Practice When Germans Hoisted Red Flag and Sank Warships

Special Cable Dispatch to the International News Service.

(By Courtesy of the London Daily Sketch.)

Kirkwall, June 23.—Here is the story of the end of the German fleet, even more dramatic than the surrender:

At midday the red flag and the German flag were hoisted on all of the seventy-one vessels, and before the British knew what was happening the valves had been opened and all ships began to sink.

Almost the entire British fleet, which rightly or wrongly was considered the guardian of the German ships, was seaward, engaged in battle practice. It was immediately recalled by wireless.

Meanwhile the guardships remaining, mostly trawlers and drifters, believing a mutiny had begun, opened fire both on the German ships and on the boats crowded with escaping German sailors.

Crews that had not taken to the water immediately began to jump overboard when the British fired. All were for a considerable time in the water before being picked up.

Many of the German ships had disappeared before the first units of the British fleet returned to the scene.

By 3 p. m. when the whole British fleet had gathered, all enemy destroyers had either sunk or been beached.

Three battleships and three battle cruisers remained afloat, but low, and sinking fast.

The Hindenburg (27,000-ton battle cruiser), after an unsuccessful effort to beach her, sank a short distance from Cava Island, only her masts and funnels showing.

Another battle cruiser turned turtle while being beached and sank like a stone in less than a minute.

$350,000,000 and 400,000 Tons Lost With German Ships; "Why"? the Great Question

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE

By International News Service Staff Correspondent.

London, June 23.—Admiral von Reuter, commander of the surrendered fleet, personally ordered its scuttling by the crews in the belief that the armistice had expired.

According to the Daily Express, he says so himself in the following message to the British commander:

"I ordered the sinking in the belief the armistice was terminated and following the German navy's tradition which knows no surrender."

In the firing on boats in which German sailors escaped from the scuttled warships, six men were killed and ten wounded.

EMDEN HALF-SUBMERGED.

The Baden (28,000-ton battleship) was afloat at 4:30 yesterday afternoon, when she was boarded by British sailors who hoisted the white ensign to the main mast, leaving the German flag flying behind it.

Of the five light cruisers, one was cast adrift and came safely ashore. The Emden (5,400 tons) and another were towed by tugs and came into Swanbister Bay and are now half-submerged. A fourth light cruisers suddenly turned and sank while being towed. The fifth sank at her anchorage.

All that remains visible of the Armada in the Baden, a few dull red hulls peeping above the shallow water, three small cruisers, all half submerged, and less than a dozen of the fifty destroyers.

ADMIRALTY WON'T TALK.

"The Admiralty probably will make no further statement today," said an officer of the Naval Publicity Department.

"Does the Admiralty believe that the story of the sinking of the German fleet has been fully told?" he was asked.

"For the present at least—yes," was the answer.

Four hundred thousand tons, valued at approximately $350,000,000, disappeared, and the Admiralty tells the story in exactly 130 words.

WIPED OUT IN FOUR HOURS.

History's most remarkable naval destruction, which in the short space of four hours wiped out a fleet more powerful than the entire French navy and almost equal to Japan's, definitely ends the naval power which disputed the supremacy of the seas at Jutland and long threatened Britannia's rule of the waves.

In four hours this mighty armada is wiped off the face of the waters, and a small body of men in London possessing exclusive news sources discuss the revelation of the Admiralty's 130 words in mysterious undertones.

Today's greatest question is "Why?" That is what the British public wants to know and what Parliament will demand when it re-assembles.

Why were the Germans allowed to destroy the fleet held in trust by the British Navy pending its disposition by the Peace Congress? There is no

THOUSANDS TO GREET CHIEF

Professor Eamon De Valera, President of the Irish Republic, will speak in Boston on Sunday afternoon next at the great mass meeting to be held in Fenway Park. This was practically assured today by Irish leaders in Boston and New York.

All doubt was dispelled as to the presence of De Valera in this country when the American learned positively that the President of the Irish Republic is here.

Doubts as to his presence in New York were generally expressed by persons prominent in Irish circles and the Rev. Father Timothy S. Wheelwright, half-brother of De Valera, who is a priest in the Mission Church in Roxbury, was one of the most surprised and at the same time delighted to learn of his hero-brother's presence in the United States.

Preparations were begun not only throughout Greater Boston, but throughout New England last night to make the demonstration on Sunday next at which the Irish leader will appear the most remarkable event of its kind ever held in the United States. Matthew Cummings, president of the Greater Boston Council of the Friends of Irish Freedom, and other organizations, declared that 24,000 or 25,000 men and women interested in the Irish cause would be present. The banner demonstration is set for 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

De Valera will make his formal appearance at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel either this afternoon or this evening, it was learned last night from New York. He will follow out the announcement made on Saturday by Harry J. Boland, secretary to De Valera, who, like the Irish President, won a Parliamentary seat, but, like the other seventy Sinn Feiners elected, refused to go to London. Boland's seat is in the South Roscommon district. Mr. Boland, with De Valera, was sentenced to be shot for participation in the Irish uprising in Easter week of 1916, and it was he who helped De Valera to escape from prison in England, where the Irish President had been confined several months.

De Valera will also endeavor to float in America a bond issue of the Irish Republic.

A petition signed by 4,000 members of the Friends of Irish Freedom was sent to Senator Calder and Representative Pell, asking them to have the Senate and House investigate De Valera to appear before them to state Ireland's case.

Telegrams to De Valera from all parts of the country flowed into the Waldorf at New York. They will not be opened until De Valera arrives today. The suite he will occupy is reserved for President-elect, the last occupant was Woodrow Wilson.

WAS BORN IN NEW YORK.

In the course of the romantic activities in which the Irish president is now the centre, Irishmen everywhere are lauding the mother of De Valera, who is Mrs. Charles E. Wheelwright of No. 18 Brighton street, Rochester, N. Y. Many refer to her as "the wonderful mother" and recall the fact that De Valera, born in New York, was but a child when his mother first took him to Ireland. This was following the death of her first husband. Receiving his education there, De Valera, who is now 35 years old and the father of six children living with their mother in Dublin, the head of the new Irish nation became a professor of mathematics in various educational institutions in and around Dublin. He speaks the Irish language like a native and has made many of his addresses in the Irish tongue.

Totally unlike his brother, Father Wheelwright, in appearance, De Valera, like the priest, is said to possess much of the maternal characteristics. The chief characteristic of the mother is ardent and unselfish love for Ireland. Up to last night the mother refused to believe her son was in this country, and even now would not be convinced of his presence until she had seen or had direct communication with him. In accepting the idea that he was here and remarking that she had not heard from him since he was imprisoned, the mother said her son would be more likely to go to Paris than to come here.

The positive news of his being here brought tears to her eyes and joy to her heart. Previously she said she was "amused" to read that the President of the Irish Republic was here.

TO SEEK RECOGNITION.

One of De Valera's first acts, it was said, will be to go to Washington and pay his official respects and bring the greetings of the Republic of Ireland to the Republic of the United States. He will be joined by Dr. Patrick McCartan, who also is entitled to a seat in Parliament, but refuses to accept it. Dr. McCartan has been in the United States several months as official minister plenipotentiary from Ireland to the United States. The two men will endeavor to have the new republic recognized here, an honor denied them by the peace conference at Paris.

The Irish president will endeavor to establish immediately direct trade relations between Ireland and the United States. At the present time, it is claimed, 90 per cent. of Ireland's business is done with Great Britain, which country does more business with Ireland than any country in the world with the exception of the United States.

Jack Frost Invades Home Gardens in Lexington

What is so rare, and irritating, as a frost in June, the good people of Lexington are asking themselves.

A heavy frost visited this section of the State today, "nipping" vines in some instances, and in others blighting them completely. Hundreds of dollars' damage was done to growing things. The Lexington community gardens, lying in low land in the centre of the town, suffered severely, beans, corn and potatoes and squash vines being particularly hard hit.

SERGT. ANDERSON, WITNESS AT THE BARNEY TRIAL

Artist Haydon Jones' impression of death trial as Boston police official today testified in the prosecution of Herman L. Barney and John F. Dillon, accused as slayers of Patrolman Deininger at a Chelsea garage. Sergeant Anderson repeated a statement which he swears Dillon made in his presence and that of others, telling of the movements of Barney and himself on the night that Deininger was fatally shot.

YOUTH ACCUSED OF HOLDING GIRL IN HOUSE

John J. Mahoney of South Boston Held in $2,000 on Bessie Donahue's Charges

Miss Bessie Donahue, twenty-nine, single, and giving her address as No. 26 Nelson street, Dorchester, before Judge Logan in South Boston Court today told a story that Friday at midnight she was taken to a house on Newman street, South Boston, and held there all day Saturday.

She said she was on her way home when she took a wrong car, getting off at the corner of Dorchester street and West Broadway. After asking information as to how she might get a car for home she was taken to the house on Newman street, she told Judge Logan.

John J. Manoney, twenty-three, of Eighth street, South Boston, was charged with robbing her of a watch and of assault.

The case was ordered continued until July 3 and Mahoney was held in $2,000 bail.

GIVEN THREE YEARS ON GIRLS' CHARGES

John Kennedy, married, father of three children, living at No. 25 Upton street, South End, appeared in South Boston Court today charged with assault by six little girls between 5 and 12 years of age. Judge Logan refused to grant him a private hearing. After finding him guilty, Judge Logan said: "You are one of the worst scoundrels I have ever known." He was given a three-year sentence, appealed, and was held in $2,000 for the Superior Court.

went to the Imperial poolroom, where I remained until 1 o'clock, when I went to my home in Somerville. At 1:50 o'clock I left home and came into town through Central square, arriving at Attorney Barry's office at 2:30 o'clock.

SAYS HE MET BARNEY.

"I talked with Paeff in Attorney Barry's office until 4 or 5 o'clock, when I left there with a man named Levy. We went down to Washington street and then into the Imperial poolroom. While we were there a fellow whom I didn't know came in and said that Barney and Hurley were at the Adams House.

"I went over to the Adams House and met them. Barney wore a raccoon coat and a soft hat. The three of us then walked up Boylston, through Tremont street, to Scollay square. There was some talk about a car in the Chelsea garage. Some one suggested we get it. In Scollay square we saw a limousine and asked the driver if we could hire it. Barney talked first with him; then I and then Hurley.

"We agreed upon $3.50 as the price, and left for Chelsea, going through Charlestown. I don't know what time it was. We finally stopped at a point in Washington avenue, near the car tracks, and Barney and I got out."

"Wait a while," Barney said to the driver, 'if this man ain't in we'll be going right back." Hurley stayed in the car."

At this point, according to Anderson, Dillon had been asked if he saw Hurley give Barney anything, and he replied that he had seen nothing pass between them.

"Barney and I walked up to the garage," Dillon continued, according to Anderson. "Barney looked in, and I looked in, and Barney said, 'It's there.'

"Barney snapped the catch off the door. Someone dashed out. I ran. Then I heard a shot. I didn't think Barney had a gun. I was about forty feet away and thought someone was firing at us.

"I kept running down the street, with Barney behind me. He hollered to me to help him off with his coat and I stopped, but when I thought I saw a man chasing us I started to run again. Barney caught up with me. I went through a field to the right and got an Elevated car into Boston.

"At 10:30 I met Hurley in the Imperial poolroom. He said he said to me, 'Did Barney get away or was he shot? I'm going down to Price's to see him. I know he'll be there, because he's got a flat down that way.'"

Dillon said, according to Anderson, that he did not see Barney again until they were arraigned together in Charlestown Court, but he told Anderson, according to the latter, that he had been told by Hurley that Barney was going to raise a mustache, dye his hair and "skip."

Sergeant Anderson testified that Dillon, in response to police questioning, had said that he and Barney believed that Paeff, from whom they leased the garage, was "double-crossing" them and that they suspected that he was intending to steal the car in the Chelsea garage to obtain which they made the trip on the fatal night.

TELLS OF AUTOPSY.

Medical Examiner George H. Magrath testified that he had performed an autopsy on the body of Deininger on the afternoon of Feb. 14, the day after the patrolman was buried.

Dr. Magrath identified a black overcoat, a black serge sack suit, a navy blue coat sweater, a cotton cloth shirt and an undershirt as articles of apparel he found on the body when it was turned over to him for examination. The fact that no powder burns were found on the overcoat indicated, according to the witness, that the shot had been fired at a deflection of fifteen degrees. Two victim.

In the right breast of each garment was a hole made by the passage of the bullet, which had then penetrated the tissues between the second and third ribs, passed through the lung and the big artery and lodged through the spine after a downward deflection of fifteen degrees. Two pints of blood passing from the artery into the lung and flooding it caused Deininger's death, according to the witness.

Dr. Magrath testified that when he examined the body of Deininger at the North Grove st. street morgue he saw policeman's revolver was in his left hip pocket. Three other witnesses who had previously examined the body testified that the revolver was in his right hip pocket. Dr. Magrath said that the weapon bore no evidence of having been fired recently.

JUROR FEEBLER IMPROVES.

In cross-examination Dr. Magrath was asked by Attorney Jugginis of counsel for Barney whether the wound in Deininger's body could have been inflicted by a person lying on his back and firing at the patrolman as the latter stooped over him. Dr. Magrath replied that he thought it could have been.

Dr. Magrath said that but three chambers of the revolver were loaded, but that the empty chambers were free of firing traces when he examined the weapon. He was unable to recall the position of the officer's club when he examined the body.

Dr. R. H. Coburn, jurors' physician, was called to the stand today to testify as to the condition of Daniel C. Fisher, Juror No. 2, whom he was called to treat Sunday for acute bronchial asthma. Dr. Coburn said on believed that with plenty of fresh air and an occasional hot drink the juror would be able to continue. Out consideration for Fisher's condition, Judge Callahan ordered the recess period increased from half an hour to forty-five minutes.

Famous Little North End Bar, Resort of Fishermen, Discards Gay Streamers

Beneath the shadow of Old North Church, in an obscure corner of a Prince street alley, there stands the little bar of "Tony" Cassaro, that had streams of gay crepe paper running from corner to corner of the ceiling, and for all has arrived. No more "spaghet," no more "high ones," and no more "Tony's," for the crepe is off the walls, and the floor is minus the familiar "dust," and the news from the Old country will be gathered in a friend's house or on the street corners.

"Tony" was sorry today and could find little consolation in the news that "Paeff" Judge brought from Washington yesterday.

NAVAL OFFICER WEDS RICH GIRL, KILLS HIMSELF

Young Widow Stunned and Mystified, Hears Niles Had Been Injured

New York, June 23.—A grisly advertisement in yesterday's newspapers announced that Arthur L. Niles, Jr., the young naval officer and Princeton graduate who killed himself on Wednesday night, was secretly married just one day before his death. Dorothy Hathaway Sutton, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Eli R. Sutton, the financier, was his bride.

The young maiden family knew nothing of the marriage until after his death. The young widow said at her father's country home in Garden City last night that she could not imagine why her husband had committed suicide. The clergyman who performed the ceremony, the Rev. Dr. Alpheus M. Morgan of the West End Methodist Episcopal Church at No. 101 West Forty-fourth street, refused to reveal a detail, because he had pledged to secrecy.

YOUNG WIDOW MYSTIFIED.

Grief-stricken over the sudden tragedy ending of their honeymoon, the young widow said, with eyes filling:

"I have no more idea than you have why Arthur killed himself. We were completely happy. There was not the shadow of discord between us. How could there be? Heaven knows, do not ask more of me now. I can't seem to realize——"

The young woman broke down, sobbing, and her mother slipped an arm around her, soothingly, and added:

"They had been engaged a year, and Arthur had returned from active service in the navy, which he entered after leaving Princeton [illegible] their wedding was sudden, of course—perhaps too sudden; but how could we know?

"Arthur had been injured by a mistake while in the navy and I fear now that is the cause of his death. I can think of no other explanation.

NO OPPOSITION TO WEDDING.

"There was no opposition to the marriage in his family or mine. They were married quietly at the West Side Methodist Episcopal Church on Tuesday—but please do not discuss her for particulars. Just think how you would feel if your husband killed himself a day after you were married."

The young widow is of striking beauty, tall, slender, with large brown eyes and a mass of curly brown hair. Her features were expressive of deep suffering as she sat sharply with her gown of black chiffon over sombre crepe de chine. She would hardly admit that the reporter for the American, but her voice was unsteady and in spite of an effort to be calm she controlled herself.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE HOLD OUTING THURSDAY

The Boston Chamber of Commerce next Thursday will revive a pre-war custom when it will hold its annual outing. Business will be suspended promptly at 3:30 p. m. and the members and employes of the Chamber will line up behind a band and march down to Atlantic avenue and board a steamer for the boat. Plans being arranged for on the boat trip down the harbor and at Nantasket, where a program of sports including baseball, quoits and foot races, has been arranged before the dinner at which there will be further entertainment and comic stunts. The party will return on the 9:45 boat.

WALSH TO RESIGN FROM UNITED SHOE WORKERS

Several candidates are already in the field for the position of Stephen Walsh, who is generally expected to resign his resignation at the general convention, to be held in Brooklyn, N. Y., the first week of September. Among the candidates are George W. Savage, business agent of Lasting Machine Operatives, Local No. 1, Lynn. Walsh first became prominent in the labor movement in August, 1885, when he was elected master workman of Cutters' Assembly, No. 6672, Knights of Labor.

LYNN CHILD'S SKULL FRACTURED BY AUTO

Margaret Griffin, eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Griffin, No. 12 Austin street, Lynn, is on the danger list at the Lynn Hospital with a fractured skull received when she was hit by the automobile of Charles S. Card, No. 11 Cushing street, Lynn, as she was crossing in a street near her home.

Card took her to the hospital in his automobile and then reported to the police. He said he slowed down at the corner to avoid the accident, but failed to avoid it.

LAWRENCE MAN DIES OF AUTO INJURIES

Lawrence, June 23.—Omer Desjardins is dead at the Lawrence General Hospital from injuries suffered in an automobile collision on Broadway and Essex streets. He was standing against the wall of a building when a truck driven by Evaristo Pepin of No. 745 Essex street and a passenger car driven by Fred Andrachek crashed. The truck, forced upon the sidewalk, pinned Desjardins against the building, cutting off one of his legs.

BAY STATE HOTEL MAN INJURED AT PORTLAND

Portland, Me., June 23.—W. C. Winchester, fifty-five, proprietor of a West, Townsend, Mass., hotel, fell fifty feet from the Chase House upper window early today. He was picked up unconscious and hurried to a hospital. It is believed that his injuries will prove fatal.

Wife Called Most Perfect Woman in Man's Will

New York, June 23.—The "most perfect woman" is Mrs. Geneseman Baird, widow of Major Charles Gamble Baird, Richmond Hill, according to the estimate of her in the will of the officer who was the first army officer from Richmond Hill to be slain in action in France. The contents of his will which leaves $20,000 to the widow were disclosed today. It read in part:

"I want to say to the world that my wife is my realization of the most perfect woman I ever saw, seen or heard of. She is endowed with marvelous courage, a very strong will and an intensely high ideal of honor. Her love has never diminished but has grown always until I feel that it reached a point that can reasonably be considered the acme of perfect love.

"I am the richest of men in that I am blest with the truest, most honorable and loving wife in the world."

SOUTHERNERS AT DEVENS WORRY NEGRO SUITOR

Reported They Are Making Quiet Inquiries That Have to Do With "Honey" Hazzard

Ayer, June 23.—New cause for worry today entered the life of the distraught "Honey" Hazzard, the colored fisherman whose plans to marry the weather white employer, Miss Mabel Puffer, were knocked askew by the arrest of both his sweetheart and himself.

The pointed remarks of a group of southern soldiers from Camp Devens concerning their possible obligations in the premises constituted the new rift in the hapless "Honey's" late [illegible] and but Mississippi.

"Tom" Kittredge, the village barber, reported that the soldiers had made inquiries at his shop about the strength of the State police force in town. In anticipation of possible trouble between the soldiers and the considerable colored population of Ayer, a force of police servants, that they would advise "Honey" to avoid the Camp Devens men, particularly those speaking with a decided accent.

"Honey" today laid aside the checkered suit of the jail bird, in which he first was Miss Puffer's fiance. He essayed no chores, spared his breakfast and spent the day in white flannels at the home of his mother's house behind the Town Hall, where he had a quiet view of the women's demonstration in which Miss Puffer is quartered in the local jail, facing a charge of insanity.

A thick coat of whitewash on the windows of the room shut the scene out of the sight of each other, but "Honey" kept his eyes riveted on the jail, and he was rewarded when his [illegible]-year-old sweetheart would appear for her daily stroll with her keeper, Mrs. Mary Sughroe, the State police matron.

RAISE OF $200 FOR FIREMEN OF BROCKTON

Brockton, June 23.—Mayor Gleason today recommended an increase of $200 a year for Brockton firemen on July 1, and the board of aldermen is expected to act favorably on the recommendation at the meeting next Monday night. The mayor's message was sent by Captain Thomas G. Spellacy, president of the International Association of Fire Engineers, and John J. Coveney, vice-president. The increase of $200 a year on July 1 would bring the firemen's salaries up to the maximum of $1,600 paid in Boston and surrounding cities and towns.

BOSTON POLICE PREPARED WITH MACHINE GUNS

Crowley Declares Department Ready for Emergency; Vacations Said to Be Cancelled

"The Boston police department is ready with machine guns for any lawless situation that may arise."

This was the statement made today to the Boston American by Superintendent of Police Michael H. Crowley and backed up by Police Commissioner Edwin U. Curtis.

The statement was called forth by a report which reached the American that the vacations of all police officers had been suspended for the month of July.

Superintendent Crowley said he would neither affirm nor deny that police vacations had been suspended. "You can say," he told the American, "that the man who shoots a child in Boston need have any fear of harm from any lawless outrages planned by 'reds' or any other enemy of law or order for the Fourth of July or any other day."

TO TRAIN WITH GUNS.

"The Boston police department is ready to cope with any emergency that may arise either on the 4th of July," said Superintendent Crowley. "We have the men who are trained in the use of machine guns. They can take them apart, put them together and operate them. They are ready to do their use.

"These men have already had target practice and are going down the harbor this week for more. When they have finished with target practice the machine guns will be distributed throughout the city, ready for any situation that may arise.

"You can rest assured that the public will be properly protected and that the police department will be able to handle any situation that may come."

Commissioner Curtis, the Superintendent Crowley, declined to state whether all vacations of Boston policemen scheduled for July have been cancelled. It is understood that every effort will be made to have no vacation next month has been told that he cannot get off as planned.

SHORT OF MEN.

Those who have received the order believe that the reason for it is because of the threats of dynamite outrages by "Reds." As the department is said to be below normal strength, every available man will be within reach at all times during July.

Superintendent Crowley said that in addition to the machine guns, the police department will be able to handle any situation that may arise.

MRS. WILLIAM F. DRAPER DIES IN ROME, AGED 65

Hopedale, June 23.—Word has been received here of the death in Rome, Italy, of Mrs. Susan Preston Draper, formerly of this town. She was the widow of Ambassador William F. Draper, United States Ambassador to Italy from 1918 to 1919, and died in her sixty-five years of age. Her daughter, Princess Boncompagni, was at her bedside when death came. The funeral will be held tomorrow from the Draper estate in Hopedale. Mrs. Draper was born in Kentucky, her father being the late General William Preston, for many years United States Ambassador to Spain. A fountain and statue of "Hope," and an equestrian statue of her husband, costing $40,000, which she presented the town, adorn the parks here.

K. OF C. MOVE OFFICE FOR JOBS TO HUT ON COMMON

The K. of C. office which has been conducted at the Statler building for the purpose of securing jobs for ex-service men was transferred today to the building on the Common, where the work of the Knights merged with the similar work already in progress at the Y. M. C. A. building, house of the K. of C. Jobs-for-campaign will end July 5, and Edward F. Aldermen is expected to act favorably on the recommendation at the meeting next Monday night. Plans are being prepared by Captain Thomas G. Spellacy, president of the International Association of Fire Engineers, and John J. Coveney, vice-president. EXPERT REFUSES TO STATE FATAL DOSE OF LEAD body you ever examined for lead poisoning? A.—I did not. I said this was the first fatal case. In the chemical laboratories I examined many cases.

The witness read from Whitehouse and other authorities, but admitted he never read Robert S. Emerson.

The court—May I put in a question? Did you in your testimony rely in whole or part on the medical books Attorney Daley mentioned? A.—I did in very small part.

The Court—Then you may ask about authorities, Mr. Daley.

Attorney Daley asked the witness if he knew that certain authorities said 1,460 grains of lead did not constitute a lethal dose. Attorney-General Attwill objected, and was sustained, on the ground that the book was the best witness. A book written in German by Dr. Rudolph Roberts was produced, and he read the paragraph referred to.

Q.—What do you consider a fatal dose of acetate of lead. A.—A fatal dose? I do not know actually. Authorities disagree.

Q.—Will you say now what you considered a fatal dose in this case? A.—I don't think I can say that.

INCONSISTENT WITH LIFE.

T.—How many grains in this case would be inconsistent with life. In your opinion. A.—I think the amount found here would be inconsistent with life. I found three and one-half grains in the brain and liver and 120 grains in all the other tissues.

Q.—If the marrow of the bones contained such large quantities why did you not examine them? A.—Simply because it was not customary to get to marrow.

Q.—Have you determined a lethal dose? A.—I cannot call this a dose. The amount taken internally may not be assimilated.

Q.—Was the amount of lead found in the brain and liver the cause of death? A.—I think the amount in the brain was enough.

Q.—Don't you know, doctor, that people who work where lead is used assimilate enough lead so that it shows three or four years later? A.—I do. I have two sets of figures on this problem, one compiled from experiments made on animals, one showing results among human beings.

Witness was instructed by the court to read the tales relating to humans and to read from authorities other than his own.

A legal tilt between attorneys resulted from objections on the part of the attorney-general to introduction of as much expert testimony relating from other cases.

"We can't try all these cases here," he said, "we're trying this New Jersey case without objection; don't forget that. You wanted to open it up, and we didn't object."

"We have nothing to be afraid of," retorted Mr. Daley.

The court said, "we will proceed with the case."

Judge Thayer said to the witness, "would it be possible to give a dose of 50 grains a day for five days and the person not vomit?"

A.—It is possible but not probable. The majority would be mighty sick and die.

REFUSES TO STATE TOTAL DOSE.

Q.—Do the authorities that you read state the minimum amount of lead that may be taken? A.—I have repeatedly stated that the authorities do not state. The amount that is taken is of no importance. It is the amount that is assimilated in the system.

Q.—Then you don't want to give the court and jury any opinion of yours as to what constitutes a fatal dose? A.—You're right, I don't.

Q.—Then these authorities are wrong when they say what a fatal dose is. A.—They are wrong if they say that; it's the amount that's assimilated, not the amount that is given, as I said before.

Redirect by Attorney-General Attwill:

Q.—Do you know the symptoms of lead poisoning? A.—Weakness, pains in the stomach, constipation and low temperature.

Q.—In industrial poisoning how is it taken into the system? A.—Sometimes by the mouth, if the workman has dirty hands; sometimes by the nose and throat if it is breathed in.

Witness said he knew that lead was used in connection with other medicines but would rather not give evidence, as he is not a pathologist.

Q.—What effect would the amount you found in the stomach have on the person? A.—If it hadn't been absorbed it would cause vomiting and might pass off.

Q.—When in your opinion was the amount administered? A.—The amount must have been administered within two days—not longer.

Q.—Can you give an opinion as to whether alcohol weakens this person's resistance to lead? A.—It does.

The two Wilkins brothers, William and Mark, brothers of Mrs. Lundgren, were in court today for the first time. They came from Bayonne and will be called as defence witnesses.

Campaign Launched in U.S. for Freedom of Scotland

New York, June 23.—A campaign to enlist American support for Scotland's demand for self-determination and autonomy will be opened here this week by George James Bruce and Jessie A. Macara Bruce. Mr. Bruce is secretary of the Highland Land League and Jessie Bruce is joint treasurer.

"America can help Scotland in gaining self-government now by money in the same way and fashion that America has helped Ireland," said Mr. Bruce. "We shall try to impress upon American legislators that in the League of Nations there should be provision for every large power giving discontented nations a military power and the right of self-determination.

"We aim to stop the domination of the Celts by Anglo-Teutonic Saxons. Our objects are not only autonomy for Scotland, but the return to the people for their use and enjoyment of the large amount of land taken from them and held by English nobles and other landlords in the highlands of Scotland."

WILL IRWIN, ON COMMON, CALLS FOR RECRUITS

Noted War Correspondent Stirs Youths With His Speech at Noon Rally

"The Americans in this world war never took a backward step. Our army did magnificent work," declared Will Irwin today at the noon rally for army recruiting at Liberty Corner on Boston Common, held under the auspices of the Boston American.

More than 500 persons crowded around the speakers' stand to hear this war correspondent praise the American Army and call upon the younger men to give their services to the country to relieve the men over there.

"We sent over the finest army that ever struck the shores of Europe," continued Mr. Irwin. "I remember being in Paris when every one was feeling downcast and there was no singing and all looked dark. Then came the word that the Americans were coming. This cry had been heard for some time, but it soon became real.

"Paris when it came face to face with the Sixteenth Infantry, the first of our troops to arrive over there, to put on smiles. It was such a change over what I had formerly seen.

"Our boys over there never took a step that was not forward. They made blunders as all the armies made blunders, but when it came to Argonne Forest, which the Germans had fortified with machine guns secreted away, our boys ventured and took every gun they set out to take.

"The army work will be largely garrison duty in the future. You young men are asked to enlist in the army. You ought to feel it an honor to take the places of the men who have fought so bravely over there, for they need a rest. You, in joining the army, will get discipline and educational facilities which you will not get elsewhere."

Davis S. Wheler, Y. M. C. A. worker, called upon the crowd to help in and get a chance on the training ground and showed how a young man is benefited from what he receives in the army.

The Filene Band of twenty pieces under the leadership of Albert Fisher, played many airs. "Babe" Bates and Dorothy Whaley sang duets with the co-operation of the Leo Feist Company, while Chip Story at the Steinert piano made up one of the best entertainments of the army rallying series.

Major F. H. Shaw and Major George Elsey of the army recruiting station reported today many men enlisting for the Mexican border. Twenty-five passed creditable examinations today and many more are on the list waiting.

THREATENS CAR MEN WITH LOSS OF CHARTERS

Mahon Orders Striking Bay State Trolleymen Back to Work at Once

would be to secure the abolition of the 1918 agreement and to do away with the Rooks hand register. The Woburn local is one of those which joined the original strike by Lowell local.

After meeting the union delegates, President Mahon was scheduled to hold a second conference with Homer F. Loring, chairman of the board of public trustees of the reorganized company, and George W. Garrett, Lawrence, counsel for the company. A committee from the union delegation was expected at the second conference also.

Extension of the strike to every point south of Boston was threatened today when Quincy Local No. 253 threatened to call out the employes of the power plant at Quincy Point if the strike was not settled by midnight. This plant supplies the power which operates all the Bay State lines serving Fall River, Taunton, Brockton, Weymouth, Hingham, Quincy, Middleboro, Newport and other cities and towns.

MAHON'S STATEMENT.

President Mahon's statement was as follows:

"The Bay State car men are under a contract which provides that all grievances shall be arbitrated. They have broken this contract and, unless they follow my order to return to work, the International Union will take drastic action.

"The trouble, started by one local in striking, was illegal. The Bay State railroad will not treat with them until they have returned to their work.

"I have pleaded and pleaded with the men since last Friday, but no attention has been paid to my efforts.

"There is only one action which the International can take, and that is to revoke the union charters, which, of course, I hate to do, unless the strike ceases. I inform me today that they will return to work.

"I know nothing of the merits of the strike. The only course the men of Lowell local could have taken was to have their grievance committee protest to the superintendent of Lowell division. If that failed, they could secure redress from the International Union, and if then no satisfaction could be obtained, the grievances should have been presented for arbitration.

GENERAL STRIKE THREATENED.

"That local did not take this course but called a strike, which was joined by five other local unions. A serious rupture between officials of the Bay State and the unions followed and now a general strike on all divisions is threatened.

"When I hear from the joint committee of the unions, with which I am now going to confer, and learn their intentions, my work here will be done.

"If they persist in their determination to strike, the International Union will order their local charters and their present wage agreement broken and all union privileges revoked.

"I personally know nothing of their planned course of action. I am to confer with an attorney representing the company late today, but only in my capacity as an international officer who has opposed the strike since its beginning.

"It shall not try to effect any settlement by trying to receive a concession from the Bay State company. I have ordered the men to return to work. If they again refuse to return today, the International Union will take drastic action."

VAHEY AT CONFERENCE.

President Mahon, John H. Reardon of Worcester, one of the International vice-presidents, and James H. Vahey, counsel for the unions, conferred with the officials of non-striking locals today.

It was reported that Gloucester and Taunton locals might join the strike at 2 o'clock tomorrow unless a general settlement was attained.

One hundred conductors, motormen and car barn men of Weymouth section of Quincy Division, who are attached to East Weymouth car barn, voted again today to remain at work; also to petition the international union officers for a separate charter which would divorce their section from the striking Quincy local.

They appointed a committee of five, headed by Lewis Beach, to carry this proposition to International President W. D. Mahon at the Quincy House in Boston. They called the strike illegal and unsanctioned by the International. They continued running cars today in the Weymouths and to Nantasket Beach, Hingham and Rockland.

Petition to the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy to send Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Home with Six Months' Pay

Sign this petition, get your friends to sign it, and forward it to the Boston American, 80 Summer st., Boston, Mass.

To the Honorable Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War:
To the Honorable Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy:

The undersigned respectfully urge you to return to their homes as soon as possible the soldiers, sailors and marines who have accomplished so brilliantly every object America had in the war.

We urge, also, that you obtain the necessary authority to pay these men their military wages for six months, or for some sufficient period after their discharge from the army until they can obtain useful and remunerative employment.

We urge this as an act of simple justice by a great nation to its heroes.

Danger Lurks In Summer Foods For Babies

EVERY mother knows the evil effects of summer heat on cow's milk. This danger is equally great to all foods unless carefully kept in a cool place away from insects.

Bad food loses its nourishing value. It causes constipation and diarrhea. These are at best always prevalent in the summer time. They depress the mind and weaken the body, and may cause more serious illness.

The first precaution is to see that the stools are regular and normal. In the case of babies and children, if less than twice a day you may suspect constipation, if more than three times a day, diarrhea. A remedy is then needed that will regulate and tone the bowels, and you will find none safer and better than Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin that millions of mothers constantly have in the house for just such purposes.

A bottle of Syrup Pepsin can be bought at any drug store for 50c and $1 the latter the family size. A free trial bottle can be had by sending your address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 460 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

Washington, June 23.—Some of the wealthiest residents of Serbia have been found living in stables and hen houses by American Red Cross officers, according to advices received here today.

The condition of the Serbian poor, according to the dispatches, is beyond description. A large proportion of them are without homes.

JOHN O'SULLIVAN WINS FIGHT FOR IRELAND

Big Irish Tenor Knocks Out Englishman in Paris Studio Apartment

Paris, June 23.—John O'Sullivan, the big Irish tenor of the opera here, was the victor in the fourth round of a finish fight with George Willis, an Englishman, a few days ago.

The boxing match was arranged as the result of a blow struck by O'Sullivan in the Grand Cafe. Willis had made an attack upon the Irish tenor's distinguished guest, declaring "The Irish are not civilized."

O'Sullivan, who was present, demanded that the statement be retracted and when Willis refused knocked him down.

"On behalf of the 250,000 Irishmen who fought for civilization in the late war," declared the tenor dramatically as he struck the blow.

Both men and their friends immediately adjourned to a studio apartment, near Place l'Etoile, where they could settle the matter with their fists.

Both were heavyweights and as both had seen service in the war they were in good shape. Their blows were wild, but did much damage when they landed. It was a jucky left swing that won the fight for Ireland.

NAHANT MUST CHOOSE JITNEYS OR TROLLEYS

Nahant, June 23.—The transportation committee recently appointed by a town meeting, one of the duties of which was to consider the matter of railway or jitney service for the town, has made a report in which it states the town of Nahant can have either jitneys and railway service and must choose between them.

The members of the committee are of the opinion that any competition with the street railway should be eliminated entirely, as the only company which has handled the transportation problem cannot continue in competition and is considering taking up its tracks.

GIRL ACCUSED OF AUTO THEFT HELD IN BANGOR

Bangor, Me., June 23.—Miss Mary Daley, twenty, of Providence, wanted in Franklin, Mass., on a charge of the larceny of an automobile owned by Stephan Ariff, a tobacco dealer, business in Court street, Boston, surrendered to the police here upon learning that she was wanted.

Miss Daly claims that the car is her own, and showed the police receipts for payments on it amounting to $500. She was accompanied here by a chauffeur, who was allowed to go. The woman is held pending the arrival of a Massachusetts officer.

WIDOW OF FAMOUS HORSE TRAINER TAKES LIFE

New York, June 23.—Mrs. Georgia Allen, widow of Matt Allen, the famous horse trainer, who died a year ago, was found dead in her room at the home of her niece, Mrs. Myrtle Wood, at No. 1115 Eighth avenue, Brooklyn. The room was filled with gas from an open jet. In the room was a note, it is said.

"Because of family troubles and my not being treated right."

CAR ACCIDENT HOLDS UP VIADUCT TRAFFIC

Traffic over the East Cambridge viaduct was tied up for one hour today when the trailer of an inbound Clarendon Hill train was derailed at Bridge and Fourth streets, East Cambridge. The cause of the derailment was the breaking of the trailer tongue as the train was passing over a temporary switch. None of the passengers was injured.

COYLE PRESSES CLAIMS OF STATION EMPLOYES

P. J. Coyle, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Station Employes, is in Washington today to take up with Director-General Hines and the Board of Railroad Wage and Working Conditions several matters pertaining to the interest of the station employes, particularly the matters passed upon at the recent convention, the principal one of which was increased compensation with a minimum rate of 55 cents per hour.

NORTH ADAMS AIRMAN BACK FROM FRANCE

North Adams, June 23.—Norman W. Blanchard, who was in service for two years as a member of the United States Aero Squadron, has received his honorable discharge and has returned home.

He operated in the Toul and Meuse-Argonne sectors.

B. U. EXERCISES COMBINE GAY AND GRAVE

Mary Kearney Voted Prettiest Girl and "Spudsie" Spaulding Most Popular

The prettiest girl in the senior class of the College of Liberal Arts of Boston University is Miss Elizabeth Mary Kearney of Manchester, N. H. That's the result of the vote taken by the class and announced today at the class day exercises at Lasell Seminary, Auburndale.

Miss Nellie H. Young of Campello was voted the "class shark," and Miss Elizabeth M. Whalen of Beverly the wittiest.

As to the most popular girl and fellow in the class of 1919, the choice unanimously fell to Miss Miriam L. Spaulding of Worcester and the class president, James Guthrie Dow of Lowell.

"Spudsie," as Miriam Spaulding is called around the college, is the holder of the silver loving cup for the tennis championship at the College of Liberal Arts for two successive years. She has just beaten Miss Elizabeth D. Macy of Brookline, a junior, who was up for the finals with Miss Spaulding. "Spudsie" is president of the Girls' Athletic Association, won her "B. U." letter for playing on her class basketball team for three years, and is captain of the 1919 team.

HONORS FOR MISS THOMPSON.

The senior who has done the most for the college is Miss Margaret H. Thompson of Roslindale, president of the C. L. A. Young Women's Christian Association. Miss Thompson has played on her class basketball team throughout her four years in college. She was class secretary her sophomore year, president her junior year and secretary of the War Council this year, an editor of the 1919 Hub and always active in the Y. W. C. A. Despite these many activities she has attained a high scholastic standing, being one of fifteen seniors elected to Phi Beta Kappa this year.

The most popular professor in the College of Liberal Arts is Professor Joseph Richard Taylor of Cambridge, whose humor makes all the students endeared to him. The seniors were asked to give their reason for their choice and one girl wrote regarding Professor Taylor: "I like him for his whiskers, but I also like him for himself."

Another pleasing feature of the Class Day exercises was the presentation of ten-cent gifts to her classmates by Miss Clara V. Sargent. Appropriate "shams" accompanied the gifts, which Miss Sargent spent many hours in selecting. Cheers and laughter greeted the presentations.

EXERCISES BEGIN.

President James G. Dow opened the exercises with an address of welcome. Warren H. Reynolds of Roxbury was class marshal; he led his classmates in the traditional procession at Lasell Seminary grounds.

Harold Y. Williams of Reading gave the class oration. The program alternated with the light and serious features, Miss Nellie H. Young's valedictory following the presentation of class gifts.

Brilliance of a different sort was next shown in Miss Lillie M. Best's class poem. She had also served on many committees, being chairman of the Gamma Delta reception to the S. A. T. C. and treasurer of the War Service Union.

Miss Dorothy S. Smyth of Manchester, N. H., wrote the words of the class ode, while Arthur Norman Sharp of Winthrop composed the music. Hundreds of relatives, friends, professors and undergraduates thronged Lasell to enjoy the class day exercises.

The words of the class ode follow:

Thou child of war clouds black as night,
In pressing doubt and darkness born,
Thy riches, now ordered with hope for light,
Gleam rose and gold from breaking morn.
Although thou bear'st of strife a song
Thy soul dost overflow with soul
That rushes on supreme air
With pinions high, of purpose strong.

Thy priceless matter gave thee treasure,
A heritage priceless, ever free.
Immortality dwelleth in thee, in the measure
Secure to her, endowed by thee.
Her noble ideals to attain—
We dedicate our dauntless youth
Of hallowed dreams and hearts aflame
To lead steadfast in the quest of Truth.

Trustees and Stockholders Claim Acts Involving $13,600,000 Are Illegal

Arthur H. Stevens of Boston, William C. Hunneman of Brookline, trustee, Madeline Foster of Newton, Cornelia M. Dodd of Boston and William H. Colby of Salem, stockholders of the Boston & Maine Railroad, through their counsel, Robert M. Morse, have filed a bill in equity in the Supreme Court against the Boston & Maine Railroad Company, attacking the validity of the outstanding loans of the Boston & Maine and its leased lines on March 31, 1915, amounting to $13,600,000.

The Legislature of 1915, in what is known as the reorganization plan, authorized the Boston & Maine to contract that debt, and do other things for the benefit of the road. It is claimed by the complainants that this act is unconstitutional in that the Legislature exercised executive and judicial powers, and also because it deprived persons of property without trial by jury.

The bill alleges that prior to June 30, 1909, the Boston & Maine had no floating indebtedness, and in detail gives the transactions which led to the debt of $13,600,000.

The acquisition of the stock of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester Railroad Company is first dealt with. On about Feb. 14, 1910, it is alleged that the president of the Boston & Maine, without authority of the directors, purchased for the Boston & Maine 16,944 shares of the stock of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester Railroad, paying therefore the sum of $2,715,274; that between February, 1910, and June 30, 1910, the president of the Boston & Maine without authority of the directors bought 287 additional shares of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester road, for which $40,866 was paid.

WITHOUT AUTHORITY.

These purchases were made without the consent or authority of the stockholders of the Boston & Maine and without the consent or approval of the Railroad Commissioners; that thereafter, on April 12, 1911, upon petition of the Boston & Maine, the Railroad Commissioners approved the purchase of stock of the Nashua, Worcester & Rochester, the Boston & Lowell, the Maine Central and the Concord & Montreal railroad companies, but that no issue of stock or bonds to pay for any of the purchases was authorized by the Railroad Commissioners, and that no issue of stocks or bonds to pay for the shares of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester road was made by the Boston & Maine Railroad.

On or about March 1, 1910, it is alleged that the president of the Boston & Maine, without authority of its board of directors, borrowed from the New England Navigation Company the sum of $2,688,796.98, giving notes of the Boston & Maine therefor. This money, according to the bill, was used to pay for the 18,944 shares of the stock of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester road. Previous to March 29, 1910, it is charged that the president of the Boston & Maine, without authority, borrowed $2,215,155 from the Maine Central and gave notes of the Boston & Maine for that amount.

BORROWED $4,400,000.

On March 29, 1910, it is alleged that the president of the Boston & Maine, without authority, borrowed $4,400,000 from the Maine Central, and out of that sum the debt due the New England Navigation Company, of $2,688,796.98, and the notes for $323,090 held by the Maine Central, were paid.

Down to and including June 30, 1911, the president of the Boston & Maine is said to have bought without authority 6,228 shares of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester road, for which $166,206.92 was paid. Between June 13 and June 30, 1912, 7,425 shares, all of the stock remaining of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester road, except fourteen shares, were acquired by the president of the Boston & Maine and the price paid was $1,113,750 out of the loan obtained from the Maine Central.

The complaint says:

"On June 15, 1911, the president, without authority, issued one-year notes for $5,000,000 and paid the notes of $4,400,000 held by the Maine Central; that on June 19, 1911, the directors of the Boston & Maine voted to authorize the president to borrow $5,000,000 on one-year notes, and that the purchase price of the stock of the Worcester, Nashua & Rochester, acquired between June 19, 1911, and June 30, 1912, was paid from the proceeds of these one-year notes; that all of said loans and all of said promissory notes issued therefor were made and issued without legal authority, in violation of chapter 584 of the acts of 1898, and did not constitute a valid indebtedness of the Boston & Maine."

Loans of $12,000,000 on June 10, 1912; $10,000,000 on January 28, 1913, and $17,000,000 on May 6, 1913, are also attacked in the bill, which further sets out that when the Maine Central was authorized to increase its capital stock the Boston & Maine purchased 134,441 shares of a total of $13,782,002.28—which was 32,441 more shares than the Boston & Maine was entitled to subscribe for.

Fastidious Thieves Take Cough Drops With Cigarettes

Three alleged fastidious thieves, arrested early today, were held in Somerville Court by Judge Wentworth. According to the police, the trio stole expensive cigarettes and a few boxes of cough drops to allay the irritation in their throats after smoking. The theft was from the drug store of William Beers, No. 118 Cross street, Somerville.

Manuel Suza, eighteen, seaman on the United States destroyer Tucker, now at Boston Navy Yard, pleaded guilty to two counts of breaking and entering and larceny and was held in $1,000 for the grand jury.

George Wood, sixteen, pleaded guilty to two similar counts and was held in $600 for the Juvenile Court.

Peter Corale, sixteen, of No. 95 Winter street, East Cambridge, pleaded guilty to one count and was held in $500 on two counts.

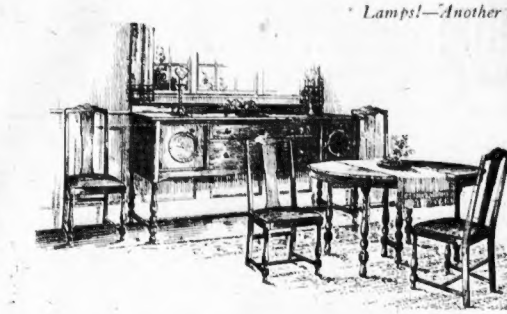
Lamps!—Another Success



WISE TO BUY NOW

The unprecedented scarcity of materials used in the manufacture of furniture as well as nearly all products, and the uncertainty about the future supply, clearly emphasizes the wisdom of buying furniture and decorations now for present or future needs.

The economic reasons are many and so widely understood that they need not be repeated.

These FACTS, however, should not be overlooked—

Fact 1—Paine's supply on hand as of June first was the heaviest in their history.

Fact 2—Purchases from this large stock mean delivery now, avoiding the annoying delays and disappointments that may occur later on.

Fact 3—The walnut dining room suite suggested by the sketch shows the moderate prices now; sideboard, table, china cabinet with latticed doors, silver table, one arm chair and five side chairs in leather—the 10 pieces complete now for $325.

Prognostications will not be indulged in, other than to repeat that it is a Part of Paine Service to recommend that it is wise to buy furniture and decorations now.

"LOYALISTS" OF ULSTER LIKE TORIES OF '75, DECLARES CREEL

IRELAND FIGHTS SAME FOES THAT COLONIES FOUGHT

The Irish Question

By GEORGE CREEL,

Former Chief of the United States Bureau of Public Information.

PART VI.

Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

In any study of the "Ulster problem," what comes to mind almost instantly is the striking analogy between the Carson-Craig attitude and the position of the American Tory in 1775.

Ulster leaders "tremble at the thought of separation from England," stand like iron against any form of self-government for Ireland, declare that there is no capacity for independence in the Irish and threaten bloodshed and disaster if any degree of freedom is forced upon them.

This style of argument was employed almost to the word by American Tories in their attempt to cripple Washington. They "trembled" morning, noon and night, protested that "the country did not want independence," branded Washington and Adams and Patrick Henry as "political adventurers of the worst type," that the Colonists had no capacity for self-government, and insisted that separation from England would entail "bloody discord for ages."

As Channing points out, this class was drawn from English landlords, colonial officials and others in receipt of place and money from the English government, just as in Ulster, but while $6,000 of these "loyalists" went into the British service to fight their fellow-Americans history does not record that Washington yielded to this minority in any degree.

An even more startling analogy, however, is found between Ulster's contention today and the Canadian situation in 1837. With certain changes in name, the case of the one might well serve as the statement of the other.

Home rule for Canada was resisted on the ground that it would put the English Protestant minority at the mercy of the French Catholic majority; the "loyalists" implored England not to subject their "wealth, enterprise and education" to the evil domination of the "idle shiftless, bigoted Papists," Papineau, the Canadian Parnell, aroused his countrymen to rebellion, Coercion Acts filled every prison with rebels, and the province rocked in every known hatred and disorder until the grant of self-government in 1841.

CANADA'S REVOLT.

Even at the risk of acquainting Americans with the history of their nearest neighbor, a danger carefully guarded against by the Chinese wall of our educational system, the Canadian struggle must be sketched, for more than any other one thing, it makes Ireland credible.

It is not unfair to say that Canada, at the outset, was the most choicely "loyal" country in the world, for it might almost be said to have been handpicked. The 50,000 English office-holders and landlords who looked upon Washington as a "dangerous agitator" found refuge in Canada, and to Canada also came thousands of English and Scotch, carefully selected by the Earl of Selkirk and other illustrious colonizers. As for the French Canadians, the bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic Church saw to it that they did not waver in allegiance to the English crown.

Even as the church has always stood for "law and order" in Ireland, so were the revolutions of America and France abhorrent to the Canadian hierarchy.

PROVINCE DIVIDED.

Yet even this population, so initially slavish developed protests in very short time, and as early as 1791 we find the astute Pitt giving Canada the same sort of justice that it was his custom to shower upon Ireland. He divided the province into Upper Canada and Lower Canada, the former being entirely English and the latter almost solidly French, his idea being to keep the two races separate and antagonistic in order to guard against the dangers of unity.

Upper Canada and Lower Canada each received a "Parliament," that is, the people were allowed to elect an Assembly, but all power was vested in the Governor, sent out from England, and in an Executive Council appointed by the Governor and not responsible to the people in any degree. This shadow of popular government soon became odious to the Canadians and the feeling was made more bitter by cruel laws designed to crush protest against wanton extravagances and the grossest corruption.

In both provinces, for instance, great tracts of land were devoted to the support of "the Protestant religion in Canada," and as this was interpreted to mean the Church of England, the Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists were soon faced with a situation that put the bulk of their natural resources at the disposal of one religious faith.

$500,000 STOLEN.

A receiver-general embezzled one-half million dollars but was not punished or even removed from office. Individual protests were met by arrest, and any paper that dared to complain was instantly suppressed. The assemblies, striking back as best they could, refused to vote supplies but the governor met this by simply taking over the treasury and spending as he saw fit.

Sets of resolutions, bitter in their portrayal and denunciation of injustice, were sent to England but while the King and his advisers "deplored" and "regretted" and promised "reform," they refused flatly to give Canadians the self-government that would have enabled them to provide their own remedies for persecution, corruption and burdensome taxes.

Even as in Ireland leaders were not lacking, and religious and racial differences were forgotten in a common resistance to oppression. In Lower Canada, Louis Papineau, French, and Dr. Wolfred Nelson, English, led the forces of protest, while in Upper Canada, Scotch and English rebels were captained by William Lyon Mackenzie. Convinced at last that relief could not be won by constitutional methods, rebellion was decided upon.

BITTER FIGHTING.

Lower Canada struck first. The people organized the Sons of Liberty, and the Assembly in solemn session, virtually demanded the withdrawal of all imperial authority. The governor-general, outraged by this insolence, dissolved the House, and Papineau and Nelson straightway sounded the call to arms.

Throughout the closing months of 1837 there was bitter fighting, but the poorly armed Colonials, lacking artillery, were no match for the veteran English regulars, and by the New Year the rebellion was crushed, even as rebellions had been crushed in Ireland, and the leaders were dead, or fled, or in prison.

In Upper Canada, Mackenzie could not perfect his arrangements in time to join forces with Papineau, and it was this failure that spoiled defeat for both. It was not until November 25, the day of the most decisive battle in Lower Canada, that Mackenzie announced "the Provisional Government of the State of Upper Canada," and flung to the wind the hopeful banner of the New Republic.

A blacksmith, Samel Lount, was the commander-in-chief of the rebel forces, and under him were a thousand men armed with scythes, axes and pitchforks, only a slight variant from the pikes and sabres of the Irish. All the courage in the world may not compensate for inadequate equipment, and even as Papineau and Nelson were crushed, Mackenzie and Lount went down to defeat and despair.

"The public have no security for any fairness in the selection of juries. There was no check on the sheriff. The public knew he could pack a jury whenever he pleased, and supposed that an officer holding a lucrative appointment at the pleasure of the government, would be ready to carry into effect their designs."

POWER CENTRALIZED.

"The bench, the magistracy, the high place in the Episcopal Church, and a great part of the legal profession, are filled by this party. (The 'Family Compact'); by grant or purchase they have acquired nearly the whole of the unoccupied lands of the province; they are all powerful in the chartered banks, and till lately they share among themselves exclusively all offices of trust and profit. The principal members of this party belong to the Church of England, and maintenance of the claims of the church has always been one of their distinguishing characteristics."

The Constitution of 1791 was suspended and Canada lived under an absolutism as cruel and thorough as though it had been a Congo province. The one gleam of hope that lighted the darkness of the period was the appointment as Governor-General of Lord Durham, a wise man, just and humane.

GRANTED GENERAL AMNESTY.

One of his first acts was to call a conference of leaders from the Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, asking for their grievances and suggestions. His second act was to grant a general amnesty out of a desire to establish an atmosphere of harmony in which to work out his plans for peace and justice.

Such a man, however, and such plans, had no place in the English government's scheme of things, and Lord Durham was recalled after a tenure of six short months. In England, however, he filed a report that lives in history for its scorching indictment of English misrule. Here are some of the counts:

"It was a vain delusion to imagine that by mere limitations in the Constitution Act, or an exclusive system of government, a body strong in the consciousness of wielding the public opinion of the majority could look on as a passive or indifferent spectator while laws were carried into effect by men in whose intentions or capacity it had not the slightest confidence. Yet such was the limitation upon the authority of the Assembly of Lower Canada.

"It might refuse to pass laws, vote or refuse supplies; but it could exercise no influence on a single officer of the Crown. The Executive, the Law Officers, the heads of the administrative departments, were placed in power without any regard to the wishes of the people or their representatives, nor indeed are there wanting instances in which hostility to the majority of the people elevated the most incompetent persons to posts of honor and trust."

PATIENT SOUGHT TRIP TO BEACH IN "NIGHTIE"

Archie Dioojian, who was a patient at the Cottage Hospital, Somerville, under observation, escaped from the institution by lowering himself from the second story by some bed clothing. He was clad only in the hospital apparel. He went to the Walnut Hill garage and wanted to hire an automobile to take him to Revere Beach, so it is said.

The attendant told him to call around in a few minutes as everybody was out except himself. The police were notified and he was met at the corner of Walnut and Bow streets by Inspector Simmons and Patrolman A. S. Burns.

The sweeping brimmed leghorn has again come into its own, but in many cases it is disguised under layers of delicate lace. Wreaths of flowers and loop after loop of picot-edged ribbon also trim these interesting straws in diverting ways.

Hats of Georgette crepe and maline, because of their airy transparency, are enjoying enviable popularity, particularly in all black and all white.

A Soldier Says—
I HAVE been out of the army for almost two months," said former Corporal William Daly, of Company, 108th Infantry, "and I am just beginning to realize why some fellows resolist. time, just before I got my discharge, when I thought was a nut. But now when I thought that a fellow who joined up again was a nut. But now I understand it thoroughly.
"The army is the only real competitionship in you the world. You get true pals there; fellows who stick by you through anything. They are just like the army life; hardy and substantial. If this is a boost for recruiting I am not ashamed of it. I hope it gets a few fellows to realize those now in the army of competition."
organizations to fight the repeal will

From New York Tribune, May 31, 1919—

"Fellows Who Stick by You Through Anything"

—says Corporal Daly

In "this man's army" you form the finest of friendships, the kind that last through life. Read what Corporal William Daly, of Company M, 108th Infantry, says. He knows. He's tried it. Wouldn't you like to be one of Uncle Sam's "buddies," wearing a uniform that is honored in every land, one of the big, clean army of regular fellows, and "sit on the top of the world"? Well, here's your chance! Read every word of this advertisement.

Good Pay—Foreign Service—Free Education

When you're in the Army, Uncle Sam pays your bills—food, clothing, living quarters, everything of the best quality. He furnishes medical attention, care of the teeth, all the necessaries. In addition, at the present rate of pay, you receive $30 a month and upward—all "velvet." It means money in the bank if you are thrifty. Does your present job show you $30 a month profit?

Our Flag flies in France, on the Rhine, in the Philippines, Porto Rico, Alaska, China, Panama, Hawaii, etc. What part of the world would you rather see? Wherever the Flag floats, there Uncle Sam's boys will be found guarding its honor. Extra pay for service in Europe, Asia, Philippines and Alaska. This means experience most people gladly pay for. Uncle Sam pays you.

And when you are in the Army, Uncle Sam offers you an education—a good one.

You can study almost anything, right up to college and technical subjects. You can learn a skilled trade.

When you enlist, you actually go into training for SUCCESS in after life, laying a firm foundation to build on.

U.S. ARMY

50,000 Red-Blooded Men Going to Serve in France and on the Rhine—Now

If you want to see the battlefields of France, and the historic Rhine which the Germans thought impassable, enlist today. You will be sent across the Atlantic to join the Army of Occupation of the A. E. F. This is the chance of a lifetime. Many veterans are re-enlisting to go back there. You may be too late unless you act at once.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY—WILL YOU GO?

Healthy, Out-Door Life

In the Army, you live mostly out-of-doors. Your work builds you up physically, makes you strong, healthy, alert and masterful. Skilled physicians look after you. Your military duties keep you fit. You eat well, sleep well, feel like a king all the time. Most men gain weight when in the Army, and it's all sound muscle—no fat. Military life makes you courageous, builds up will-power and self-control, gives you mastery over yourself. It broadens your mind, and stiffens your backbone. It makes you the kind of chap that gets the best sort of job when your enlistment is up. It develops confidence and leadership. The U. S. soldier is respected everywhere, because he has the greatest government in the world behind him. His uniform is a uniform of honor. No calling builds up character and independence like the military profession.

Training in a Skilled Trade Fits You for Success in Life

There are thirteen branches of the service: Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Ordnance Dept., Medical Dept. (including Veterinary Corps), Coast Artillery, Signal Corps, Tank Corps, Motor Transport Corps, Air Service (including Balloon Corps), Quartermaster Corps, Engineers, Construction Division. You have your choice of these branches. Each branch utilizes a number of skilled trades—often a great many. These trades include surveying, auto-repairing, telephone repairing, road construction, wireless telegraphy, tailoring, photography, switchboard installation, motor mechanics (air and ground) and a great many others. YOU CAN CHOOSE WHICH OF THESE TRADES YOU WILL LEARN.

Liberty and Recreation

In the Army you have plenty of liberty, and lots of entertainment. You can play baseball, football or other games. You go to shows dances, movies. You meet agreeable people in K. of C., Y. M. C. A. and Hostess Houses. You get acquainted with nice girls. IN FACT, YOU HAVE A BETTER TIME THAN MOST CIVILIANS.

Promotion.

By sticking to the game, you may become a non-commissioned or commissioned officer. Men are also selected from the ranks to go to West Point; others are commissioned from the ranks. There are also the grades of corporal and sergeant in the line, and higher non-commissioned staff grades. Every promotion brings added pay. Marksmanship brings added pay. Skill at your trade brings increased pay.

Now, Men, what do you want? Call and talk it over To-day!

Ask all the questions you wish. You incur not the slightest obligation by doing so. Courteous non-commissioned officers on duty will cheerfully furnish information and give you printed matter to look over at home. This advertisement tells only part of the story. Get the rest to-day.

Stocks Open Strong and Turn Irregular; Morning Tone Heavy

OIL AND MOTOR ISSUES ARE WEAK

Equipments Show Strength as a Group; Marines Lower

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were rather weak in New York at noon after a morning of price irregularity and heavy tone. After the early reaction the market failed to develop strength. Declines did not average large, but a majority of active issues lost all gains and sold fractionally below the Saturday closing price. Motors and oils weakened as groups.

Among weakest stocks were General Motors, Studebaker, Mexican Petroleum, Texas Co., United Cigar Stores, U. S. Rubber, American International, American Ice, American Woolen common, Atlantic Gulf, Central Leather, Crucible, Inspiration, Kelly-Springfield, Marine common and preferred, Smelting Products, Virginia Carolina Chemical, Royal Dutch of New York and Texas & Pacific.

These issues were off from one to more than five points. Texas Co. was the weakest.

Among issues to sell at record high prices during the morning were United Cigar Stores, Chandler and Corn Products. International Nickel sold at its year's highest.

Equipments were strong as a class at noon, Baldwin being up 1¾, Pressed Steel Car ¾, Car & Foundry ⅝ and American Locomotive ¼.

PRICES ADVANCE AT OPENING.

Expectations of a strong opening were realized as almost every active stock advanced on first transactions. General Motors sold at once nearly four points above the Saturday closing figure. The earnings of this corporation for the first six months of this year, before taxes, are estimated to exceed $45,000,000. A number of issues began with a point or more advances, including Studebaker, Mexican Petroleum, Royal Dutch of New York and Central Leather. Buying orders accumulated sufficiently over Sunday to make the demand considerably exceed offerings. Early strength was attributed a discounting of cabled news that the German assembly had voted to sign the peace treaty.

MARKET REACTED QUICKLY.

But the advance soon lost momentum and was followed quickly by a reaction. Within fifteen minutes a number of leaders were showing losses instead of gain by about two to one. The market showed symptoms of a rally before the end of the first hour, however. Bears said that people who expected a decided upswing as soon as peace is formally established would be disappointed. They maintained the market has been discounting that event for weeks. Sentiment on the part of the professional crowd was more bearish than has been observed for some time.

MANY FAVORABLE FACTORS.

There are a number of influences at work which are promoting confidence on the part of the public. Commercial reports show that trade is increasing, and the acceptance of peace terms by the conquered will be the signal for executing reconstruction plans that will be epochal in finance and trade. The reserve fund improvement show by the latest New York bank statement lessened fears of another flurry in call rates.

Advance in Coffee

Since governmental restrictions upon coffee were removed the price has about doubled, it being quoted at present around 20½ cents. Upon the removal of restrictions the price at once advanced to 17 cents, then receded to 12 cents and has since been rising. There is no lack of supply. Brazilian stocks being the largest in years. But shipment to this country, where stocks were depleted, has been difficult because of a vessel shortage.

Government Iron and Steel

On June 1, according to a War Department report, the government had on hand 231,202 tons of semi-finished, finished and scrap iron and steel products, and 5,312 tons of pig iron, alloys and other raw material. It is all to be sold from time to time. It is Washington policy to avoid disturbing markets by haphazard offerings of materials or products bought for war purposes and left unused.

SUGAR SUPPLY WILL BE FAR BELOW NORMAL

Higher prices for sugar in 1920 seem forecast by estimates as to the world crop this year and world demand. World production is estimated at 16,000,000 tons, compared with 18,500,000 before the war. Refined granulated is selling in Europe now at from 12 to more than 40 cents a pound, compared with 9 cents in this country. Much will depend upon future weather and labor conditions in Cuba, which is now supplying about one-fourth of the world supply. The Cuban output for this year is estimated at a little more than 4,000,000 tons. The rainy season is about to end the season there, with on fewer than seventy plantations still grinding. The rainy season in this year is forecast by Willett and Gray at 410,000 tons.

Invisible supplies in the United States are not deemed large. The U. S. Equitation Board estimated that wholesalers held at the end of May stocks averaging about twenty-one tons per firm, as compared with 22.31 tons a year ago.

Skilled Labor in Demand

No labor shortage exists at Youngstown plants but the demand for skilled workmen exceeds supply and jobs are open at from $5 to $12 a day. There is need for machinists, blacksmiths, painters, carpenters, electricians, armature winders, millwrights, auto mechanics and roll hands in steel mills, according to recent reports from that bustling Ohio city. There are about 2,000 unemployed men there but they represent unskilled labor in the main.

Quicksilver Price Advanced

The price of quicksilver has been advanced 12 to $95 for a flask of seventy-five pounds. The supply is decreasing fast.

LOCAL MARKET DULL AND NARROW

Price Changes Are Fractional and Trading Without Features

The Boston market was fairly firm at the outset, but soon became irregular and at the end of the morning the majority of active issues had declined.

Among issues to show gains at noon were American Telephone, North Butte, Island Oil, Calumet and Arizona, Highland and Hecla. All had advanced fractionally. Amoskeag was offering being up a point and a half. Among issues which had receded were packing shares, Mohawk, Copper Range, Fairbanks, Woolen preferred, Stewart and Ventura. Woolen preferred and Swift & Co. were off a point each. A number of issues were unchanged, including United Shoe. The market was narrow and rather dull.

Anglo-American Commercial Corporation common was traded in on the Boston Stock Exchange for the first time, opening at 19¾, and afterwards selling at 20½.

Estimating June earnings, Edison Co.'s gross for the fiscal year, ended by this month, is placed at $11,450,000, compared with $9,622,605 for the previous year; net income at $4,125,000, as against $3,942,763 in 1918, and interest charges $1,032,000, as compared with $705,644. Edison common declined a point during the morning

To keep in touch with the business world— READ ADVERTISEMENTS

You can learn more from the advertisements in your daily newspaper than you could in weeks spent in visiting stores, shops and offices.

If you did not read the advertisements, you might go to a store and come home again and never learn about some new goods in that store that would interest you. But the storekeeper knows and he publishes the news in an advertisement for you to read.

If you did not read advertisements, you might go on purchasing one article for years when a new and better article has come to take its place.

It pays to keep in touch with the business world by reading advertisements.

It pays if you have nothing to buy but your own clothes and shoes and candy and books and other personal things.

It pays even more if you are buying for a household.

By keeping in touch through reading advertisements you can buy to more advantage, find out where and when to get the things you want, and avoid regrettable expenditures.

DEMPSEY'S OWN STORY

ADDED WEIGHT GREAT HELP, DECLARES DEMPSEY

BY JACK DEMPSEY.

Copyright, 1919, by the Evening Mail Syndicate.

Toledo, June 22.—Since I stepped on the scales a few days ago for the newspapers men here and weighed 201 pounds, there have been a lot of insinuations that I picked up weight very fast while laying off training and that the added pounds were in reality fat.

Nothing could have been further from the truth. My training period during the time I laid off because of the cut over my eye was just as strenuous as before, perhaps a little bit more so.

Imagine a fellow getting out of bed at 6 o'clock every morning, eating a light breakfast and then going six and seven miles on the road at pretty good speed in this heat we have had at Toledo, and you will easily agree with me that there is no chance to pick up weight. I have been through the careful attention I have received from Jack Kearns and Jimmy Deforest that I have been able to build myself up.

I need weight for big Jess Willard and I'm getting it. In addition to the long stretch of road work every morning I have been going out on the bay for a whirl at the oars or swimming a bit, romping with some children about the camp, and then another turn down the road after I have had dinner. I have kept my weight at just about the point where it was when I laid off to let my eye heal.

I regretted thoroughly that I had to stop boxing, for I am fond of it and believe there is nothing better for a man training for a bout. The road work, though, is the most important of all, for it keeps a man in the open air, strengthens his abdominal muscles and fills his lungs for the long, hard journey they must take in a bout.

If Willard, as has been reported, really has stopped road work he is, in my estimation, making a big chance. But that's his affair, not mine. I am now back in the hard boxing grind, and very glad of it. There is a great deal of satisfaction in trailing with the big gloves on. It makes you think. You figure out new ways of delivering punches and new tricks at boxing, and it hardens those muscles which a man needs most when he goes into battle.

The Jamaica Kid and Terry Kellar will be my sparring partners until Bill Tate and Jack Malone get here. If they get in I will step around with each one. Malone will box in one of the preliminaries to the big bout and is coming out with Billy Misko, according to the last word I had. He is a much smaller man than I really care to box with, but he can step fast and it never hurts to keep the speed up.

I am pretty fast in the ring, as most anyone who has seen me will testify, but it is a good thing to step fast.

Training never bothers me in the least. I go through everything as cheerfully as I can, for I know it is all for the best. When I train I banish all thought of the work from me. When I shadow box I do it with the idea that a real opponent is standing before me in the ring. When I hit the bag it is with the same idea. Therefore, I never worry. Worry is a thing that has no place in a winning pugilist's life. Worry has defeated many a good man, and I don't intend that it shall have any place in my camp.

I am naturally good tempered and I try to cultivate a habit of being cheerful. Something happened around me that would bother me considerably if I allowed my nerves to give way, but I don't. The period I have just gone through has proved more troublesome to me than anything that has taken place for some time, but it failed to ruffle my disposition. When a fellow is training for a fight he wants to be in there boxing, and I guess I am no different from the rest.

I am happy the big grind has started again and from now on the period of boxing will be stretched out and I will go at a fast clip until the day of the bout.

Dempsey Sure to Be Favorite, Says Jack Kearns

Toledo, O., June 22.—Jack Kearns feels certain that his protege, Jack Dempsey, will enter the ring here two weeks from Friday a favorite in the betting.

"It's going to break a precedent," said Jack. "For the first time in ring history a challenger will rule favorite over a heavyweight titleholder.

"Betting men are not daffy, you know. They have been figuring this thing out and I'm sure the big money will be with Jack.

"Willard never was fast. He is trying to get speed now. You can't make a racehorse out of a mule. It isn't in him. Willard he found to be slower and less effective now than years ago. He can't step in after a lay-off of three years and be the Willard he was. Betting men know this.

"And another thing, he doesn't like the game. Lumpey does. Jack is a born fighter. He knows how to fight. It's instinct with him. He never had to learn. Fighting is like McGovern. If they had tried to make a boxer out of Terry they would have spoiled him. We've got to let Jack go his own way, too."

GERARD SETS NEW STYLE AMONG MEN AT NEWPORT

Newport, R. I., June 22.—Former ambassador to Germany James W. Gerard has arrived and joined Mrs. Gerard at Pisard Cottage. No. 5. "Jimmie" Gerard set a new custom on the avenue here by appearing bareheaded and with his hair brushed back a la pompadour. His social intimates took the inference that he has thrown off the formal strains that go with the office of an ambassador and is fully prepared to enter into the spirit of Newport Summer life.

The Year of the Big Drought.

WHILE the Prohibs are stepping around pretty with a grin that you could hang earrings on, the brewers are packing expressions that look like the claws of a hungry owl.

The Dec of Independence chirps that all men are born free and equally thirsty, but from where we lean on the brass rail it looks as if some nimble fingered grouchocrazist has marked the Dec. Markham's brother to the ox is also a brother to the camel. Around July the Fifth the boys will be flatwheeling around with their tongues hanging out so far that their tonsils will get sunburned.

No Exemptions.

EVERYBODY is snared in the prohibeerinist draft and there are no outs for silly feet or loose eyes. No exemptions for scrambled arches or wild whiskers in the toupees. Before the armistice the lads in uniform couldn't snitch a drink. Impossible to grab a glass of suds in uniform. Which wasn't the tough part. The corrugated part was to keep the drink in your uniform after you got it there. The headache foundries were crocheting liquor out of everything from seventeen-year locusts to stuffed hair parlor sofas. After July we will all be in the army. There will be nothing to drink and millions to drink it.

Staggering Home from a Stag.

THERE are some cits who could die of thirst in water up to their neck-pieces. They'll be outta luck like a flea on an iron deer. There are a bunch of the birds we will miss though. For instance:

The Weeping Souse.

THIS bird would park his toes on the brass rail and inhale the snifters like a cow grabbing buttercups. About the eleventh stanza he suddenly remembers that there wasn't any Santa Claus and would bust loose with a set of tears that looked like the Canadian side of Niagara Falls. His shoulders would shimmy with sorrow and his frame would rattle like a rheumatic darky in two Gulf breezes. He'd cry until he had to swim and then he'd cry because he couldn't swim. Prohibition is the plumbea that will fix this leak.

The Leaning Jag.

THIS cuckoo could make the Tower of Pisa look straighter than a left field foul line. After he had oiled up on a few dozen yards of nose rouge his cargo would shift and his left shoulder would swing up like a railroad semaphore signalling big wreck on west bound siding. He'd start going around in circles like a glass eyed zebra on a Coney Island carousel. This is a precarious souse, as all the responsibility is on the one suspender strap.

BEFORE slamming the door from the outside, this baby had to kiss the barkeep by-by. His evening wasn't complete unless he blew his gin spangled breath on everybody in the house. Just as popular as camphor with a moth, but not quite so fragrant. He'd drink himself cross-eyed and then buzz. "Here's looking at you." When he was, he wasn't, and when he wasn't he was. What can you do with a sapp like that?

Chance for Frameup in Big Title Bout Positively Nil

By FRANK G. MENKE.

Toledo, O., June 22.—Any suspicion that the Willard-Dempsey fracas is going to be a "brother" affair, should be dispelled at once. This fight will be decided strictly on its merits.

There isn't enough money in the world to induce Willard to "lay down." He values the title more than all the tinsel that could be offered to him. And money doesn't mean an awful lot to him anyway. The champion is worth around $250,000 or $400,000 now at the lowest estimate and his guarantee of $100,000 plus movie profits will shoot his wealth well beyond the half million dollar mark. That's more than Willard could spend in two lifetimes.

RALPH DE PALMA ON TRAIL OF "HOWDY" WILCOX

New York, June 23.—There will be at least three of the famous Duesenberg land flyers in the 100-mile International Auto Derby, the feature of the card arranged for the Sheepshead Bay Speedway track on July 4, Tommy Milton, Dave Lewis and Eddie O'Donnell signed yesterday and each one will pilot a "Deuzie" in the big race.

Ralph de Palma sent for an entry blank and is particularly anxious to meet "Howdy" Wilcox in a match race.

EVEN MONEY RULES IN TITLE BATTLE ON THE FOURTH

Toledo, O., June 23.—Betting on the struggle between Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey for the world's heavyweight boxing championship July 4 was under way in Toledo today with the fighters at even money and take your pick. That's the information given out last night by C. B. Chrysler, who is one of several who will book on the battle right here on the scene.

The book-makers plan right off the reel to take all the money they can get at evens and allow the customer to choose his man. It's not like a horse race. There are only two involved, and the layers are not worrying much about the price. One to five is being offered that Willard does not answer the bell for the sixth round.

This does not mean that Dempsey has to finish Jess in five rounds. Jess may be in such bad shape that he will be unable to come up for another round. Those who like Dempsey want that extra minute for Jess to decide that he has had enough of the gruelling.

MUCH DEMPSEY COIN.

There is a preponderance of Dempsey money in Toledo now, and this may make him a favorite shortly unless much Willard coin shows up presently. Heavy bettors from New York are on the ground and are anxiously awaiting the coming of the Texas oil men, who are said to be willing to risk fortunes on the champion.

There is much scheming and figuring being done in the light of percentage betting, sharps trying to get on wagers that will insure a profit one way and no loss at all if they guess wrong. In order to do this some are betting on both men to win and then gambling on an early victory for Dempsey.

The general impression among people who bet for a living is that Dempsey is a good bet if the fight ends quickly, but that if Willard is going along nicely after five rounds that his size and strength will tell the tale and that the Dempsey bolt will be shot.

BETS ON QUICK WIN.

A newspaper writer who hails from New York where most everybody is picking Dempsey has wagered $100 to $2,000 that Jack wins in one round and $100 to $1,000 that the challenger cops the crown from the Kansas bonnet in two sessions. He thinks Dempsey is the fastest starter extant and that with a good break in the luck he may roll Jess over in jig time.

BUSY WEEK AHEAD OF RED SOX

Senators Here for Four-Game Series—Ruth's Batting Streak Stopped

By NICK FLATLEY.

One of the busiest weeks of the season stretches ahead of the Champion Red Sox, as sort of a preparation for another jaunt into the far lands. They opened today with the Senators, who remain here for four days in which they will squeeze five games, the weather being agreeable.

Then they go over to Gotham and assault the flying Yankees on four consecutive days, getting in a couple of double-headers during the same. During the coming seven afternoons they have to contest some ten games, which is enough work for any big league club, anytime.

The principal strain will be on the pitchers, for with Rush still hors de combat, and Dumont failing to show any dependable form yet, the work will fall on Mays, Jones, Pennock, Ruth and Caldwell.

The team's program after the New York engagement has a three-day stopover in Philadelphia, a return to Boston for the Independence Day double-header, with the same A's, and then the trek to the West. St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit will be visited in order, and then outfit lands back at the Fenway pasture on July 24.

RACE SHOULD BE SETTLED.

By that time the season's history will be sufficiently written to show whether or not the champions of last year will be title owners again. There isn't much prospect just now, but baseball sees many strange things, such as that triple play on a ground ball up there, Saturday.

The race at present shapes up like a tussle between the White Sox, Indians and Yankees, with the Browns and Tigers having as much chance to step in as the Red Sox. It must be noted that the Browns in their games here did not shape up at all like champions, or have the strength, offensively or defensively, of the Fenway flock.

The Senators, with us today, have been down in the boots pretty well all season, and shouldn't offer the toughest opposition in the world. A near clean-up of the series should send the Sox over to the Big Town in a mood to raise general whack with the pennant aspirations of the Capitolsters, who have hung right up on the fringe all season.

RUTH STOPPED.

They did give the locals a body blow over there yesterday in the Sunday financial success, turning them down, 6 to 2. The defeat also marked the explosion of Babe Ruth's batting streak, the big hitter failing to come through after a score of average helping days.

A sensational catch by Vick of a blow to right, said to be the longest ever made inside the Polo Grounds, was the only thing that did ruin the record the Batterer was piling up. Having already made himself the most sensational figure the game ever has known, Babe should worry a lot about missing once in a while.

'Tis certain that he has confounded those critics who claimed he couldn't hit .200 if he was in there every day, not to mention making life horrible for various and sundry hurlers.

Carl Mays, who showed against the Browns that he is back in form, was due to have another afternoon's work and help along that record he was anxious to make this season. The five Sox regular flingers are now in pretty good trim, and with some hitting back of them have sufficient class to bring the team back into the race and make life troublesome for several months for the race makers.

Fans Cheer Kramer as Veteran Wins Bike Race

Newark, N. J., June 23.—Frank Kramer received an ovation here from 10,000 fans when he defeated Francisco Verri and Raymond Eaton in two straight heats of a mile match race.

In the first heat Kramer covered the last eighth of a mile in 12 seconds flat and in the second heat he set such a stiff pace that neither of his opponents was able to keep up with him.

Eaton, riding a good race, won the five-mile open from Bedell, Lang, Goullett, McNamara and Kaiser.

Goullet won the mile handicap from scratch, riding a fine race.

HOOPER TO BE TRADED BY BARROW

New York, June 23.—Captain Harry Hooper of the Red Sox is to be traded, but whether to the Yankees or the Athletics not even Manager Barrow himself has yet made up his mind.

The Red Sox boss was in long conferences with both Manager Mack of the Athletics and Manager Huggins of the Yankees, but so far as could be learned nothing definite was accomplished. Barrow is known to be very sweet on Roth and would be willing to give the chieftain of the A's Hooper and some cash to boot, but the astute Mr. McGillicuddy is not at all willing to give up his slugging left fielder unless he can be shown where he is going to profit. So there the matter stands for the present.

What Huggins offered for the Red Sox captain, rumor does not say, but he is known to be anxious to get Hooper, whom he has been sweet upon for some time. Possibly a three-cornered deal may be fixed up, with Roth going to the Red Sox and Hooper to the Yankees, while the Athletics will be compensated by someone now in the Huggins fold.

Ernie Shore and Duffy Lewis, former Red Sox stars, figured largely in the defeat of the Barrow clan by the Yankees. Duffy was there with the bat, poling out a single, a two-bagger and a homer, while Shore held the Bostonians to five hits, only one of which, a two-bagger by McInnis in the seventh inning, was good for extra bases.

LEE MAGEE WITH CUBS; KILDUFF JOINS DODGERS

Chicago, June 23.—Magee of the Brooklyn club has been secured by Manager Mitchell and left with the Cubs for Cincinnati. Pete Kilduff, secured from the Giants some two years ago, accompanied the Dodgers on their trip eastward.

How to Play Baseball

THis is the twenty-sixth of a series of 100 articles by Hugh S. Fullerton, celebrated baseball expert, on "How to Play Baseball." In this lesson Mr. Fullerton tells how to play left field. These articles will be a feature of the American's sport pages each day. Don't miss them.

By HUGH S. FULLERTON.

The necessity of the left fielder keeping his eye on the ball all the time is great. Not only that, he should know in advance what ball the pitcher intends delivering to any batter. He is too far out to get the sign from the catcher, but it should be transmitted to him by the second baseman or shortstop after the method which will be explained later when we come to the science of signalling on the ball field.

It is essential for an outfielder, and more especially for the left fielder, to plan in advance what he will do with a ball if it is hit to him. This, of course, should be done to a greater or lesser degree by players in each position. Unless the play is planned in advance very few players will be able to think quickly enough to meet emergencies arising from unexpected drives.

The fielder should look around carefully as the pitcher is preparing to deliver the ball to the batsman, locate the position of each man on the field, watching especially to see what the center fielder is doing and whether he is shifting positions suddenly. If the center fielder should quickly shift toward right, the left fielder must go approximately the same distance in the same direction and avoid opening up a big gap.

On long drives, especially those between the fielders, it is necessary for the left and center fielders to decide instantly which is to "chase" and which is to line up to relay the ball back to the infield. Unless perfect understanding exists both men are liable to attempt to head off the ball and, if under those circumstances the ball gets between them, the one who turns to pursue it has no chance to prevent the runner from making a home run. As a general rule the one closest to the ball should start instantly over the shortest route to attempt to head off the ball, while the other should cut in behind him with the hope that with the ball traveling more slowly, he can cut it off. If he fails he pursues the ball and, whirling, throws back to the other, who is in perfect position to relay the ball.

Too much importance cannot be given to this art of relaying throws. Nearly 40 per cent. of the hits that are designated as "home runs" in the major leagues really are drives which, if perfectly handled by all concerned would be doubles or triples. In dozens of cases each season the man whose duty it is to relay the throw to the plate fails to handle the ball cleanly and gets a foot out of his proper position that he is compelled to relay in turn to the shortstop or second baseman, who attempts the throw to the plate.

Not more than two throws should be required from the outfield limits to the plate on any major league ground. The carelessness displayed by some teams in practicing fast relay throwing explains, in part, their standing in the races.

Another Fullerton lesson tomorrow will deal with center field playing.

DONOVAN PICKED TO BEAT KLOBY AT FENWAY

Fenway A. A. Selections

Johnny Donovan to beat Young Kloby.

Marjorie Labelle to beat Eddie Devine.

By JACK CONWAY.

Johnny Donovan, South Boston lightweight, will try and make Young Kloby, Y. D. champion, believe he is back at Chateau-Thierry when these two worthies meet in a twelve-round bout at the Fenway A. A. tonight.

It will be Kloby's third tussle since he came back from France. In his first start, he stopped Phinney Boyle of Lowell in one round. He then kayoed Charley Parker in three sessions.

Kloby is one of the freaks of the ring. He is thirty-two years of age and yet is one of the most feared men of his weight in New England. Two years ago the Lawrence man was earning a livelihood by the power of his fists. He then retired. It took the war to bring him back as a headliner in the dear old game of swat.

PRIDE OF LAWRENCE.

Lawrence fans believe there is not a lightweight in this section of the country who classes with Kloby. They declare he will not only dispose of Donovan, but that he will also score another knockout.

When we glance at Donovan's record we find that he is only twenty-three years old. Kloby's junior by nine years. In the boxing game few men are able to keep up with the blue-ribbon stepper after they have passed the twenty-sixth milestone.

Jess Willard is an exception to this rule. He is thirty-five, according to his own statement, while some people claim he is forty. Freddy Welsh was another exception. He was lightweight champion when past thirty.

FOURTH YEAR OUT.

But back to Donovan. He has been boxing as a professional for four years. During this time he has engaged in more than three score bouts. He has won sixteen by a knockout. His winning smashes have always been delivered in either the first or second round.

Donovan's kayo victims have not been set-ups. Dan McCormack, Young Gibbs and Johnny Gray—three of the best of the local lightweights—are among those to be sent to the mat for the count by the South Boston youth.

Donovan also fought two thrilling battles with Harry Carlson of Brockton. The first was a draw, while in the second meeting the Brockton boxer had the best of the going.

Besides being a stiff puncher, Donovan is a fast, clever boxer. He will display twice as much speed as Kloby tonight. If he is able to keep out of the way of the Lawrence man's right-hand smash, he should win.

It is also a question whether Kloby will be able to travel at a fast clip if the bout goes more than six rounds. He has won his two contests since coming back from France in short order. It would not be unreasonable to believe he would lose his ginger if he failed to get over a clean punch early in the encounter.

Donovan, of course, has the stamina to go the full distance at top speed. He has trained with Young Ahearn, who has taught him all the fine points of the glove game. Ahearn is so enthusiastic over Donovan that he is willing to wager $1,000 against $1,000 that the South Boston lightweight wins by a knockout.

Marjorie Labelle and Eddie Devine will furnish the excitement in the semi-final contest of eight rounds. There will also be a couple of six-round events.

Refreshing flavor and fragrance and unusual mellow-mildness make Camel Cigarettes instantly and permanently likable!

Camels are sold everywhere in scientifically sealed packages of 20 cigarettes; or ten packages (200 cigarettes) in a glassine-paper-covered carton. We strongly recommend this carton for the home or office supply or when you travel

18 cents a package

CAMELS are a cigarette revelation! They are a smoke delight! They answer the cigarette question as it has never before been answered.

Camels are an expert blend of choice Turkish and choice Domestic tobaccos which you will greatly prefer to either kind of tobacco smoked straight.

This expert blend brings out Camels' wonderful cigarette qualities. It eliminates any unpleasant cigaretty aftertaste or any unpleasant cigaretty odor! It also makes possible Camels' enticing mildness while retaining the full "body" of the tobaccos.

No matter how much you like Camels and how liberally you smoke them, they will not tire your taste! The blend takes care of that!

For your own satisfaction compare Camels with any cigarette in the world at any price!

Jack London's Last Novel

HEARTS OF THREE

Never Before Published

By JACK LONDON

Author of "The Call of the Wild," "The Valley of the Moon," "The Sea Wolf," "The Iron Heel," "White Fang" and Other Famous Novels

The theme of this story was suggested to the author by Charles W. Goddard.

AGAIN with laughing eyes, she summoned the waiting woman and had his pottery mug replenished.

"A second mistake, perhaps will now result, eh?" she teased, when he had downed the drink.

"No, Queen," he replied. "Now all is clarity. My true heart I can master. Francis Morgan, he who kissed your hand, is the man selected to be your husband."

"It is true," she said solemnly. "His was the face I saw, and knew from the first."

"I am his friend, his very best friend. You, who know all things, know the custom of the marriage dowry. He has sent me, his best friend, to inquire into and examine the dowry of the bride. You must know that he is among the richest of men in his own country, where men are very rich."

So suddenly did she arise on the divan that Torres cringed and half-shrank down, in his panic expectance of a knife-blade between his shoulders. Instead, the Queen walked swiftly, or rather glided, to the doorway to an inner apartment.

"Come!" she summoned imperiously.

Once inside, at the first glance around, Torres knew the room for what it was, her sleeping chamber. But his eyes had little space for such details. Lifting the lid of a heavy chest of ironwood, brass-bound, she motioned him to look in. He obeyed and saw the amazement of the world. The little maid had spoken true. Like so much mixed corn, the chest was filled with an incalculable treasure of gems—diamonds, rubies, emeralds, sapphires, the most precious, the purest and largest of their kinds.

"Thrust in your arms to the shoulders," she said, "and make sure that these baubles be real and of the adamant of flint, rather than illusions and reflections of unreality dreamed real in a dream. Thus may you make certain report to your very rich friend who is to marry me."

And Torres, the madness of the ancient drink like fire in his brain, did as he was told.

"These trifles of glass are such an astonishment," she plagued. "Your eyes are as if they were witnessing great wonders."

"I never dreamed in all the world there was such a treasure," he muttered in his drunkenness.

"They are beyond price."

"They are beyond the valor of valor, and love, and honor."

"They are beyond all things. They are a madness."

"Can a woman's or a man's true love be purchased by them?"

"They can purchase all the world."

"Come," the Queen said. "You are a man. You have held women in your arms. Will they purchase women?"

"Since the beginning of time women have been bought and sold for them, and for them women have sold themselves."

"Will they buy me the heart of your good friend Francis?"

For the first time Torres looked at her, and nodded and muttered, his eyes swimming with drink and wild-eyed with sight of such array of gems.

"Will good Francis so value them?"

Torres nodded speechlessly.

"Do all persons so value them?"

She Scorns Gems

Again he nodded emphatically.

She began to laugh in silvery derision. Bending, at haphazard she clutched a priceless handful of the pretties.

"Come," she commanded, "I will show you how I value them."

She led him across the room and out on a platform that extended around three sides of a space of water, the fourth side being the perpendicular cliff. At the base of the cliff the water formed a whirlpool that advertised the drainage exit for the lake which Torres had heard the Morgans speculate about.

With another silvery tease of laughter the Queen tossed the handful of priceless gems into the heart of the whirlpool.

"Thus I value them," she said.

Torres was aghast, and, for the once, well nigh sobered by such wantonness.

"And they never come back," she laughed on. "Nothing ever comes back. Look!"

She flung in a handful of flowers that raced around and around the whirl and quickly sucked down from sight in the centre of it.

"If nothing comes back, where does everything go?" Torres asked thickly.

The Queen shrugged her shoulders, although he knew that she knew the secret of the waters.

"More than one man has gone that way," she said impersonally. "No one of them has ever returned. My mother went that way, after she was dead. I was a girl then." She roused. "But you, talented one, go now. Make report to your master—your friend, I mean. Tell him what I prepare for delivery. And, if he be half as mad as you know about the bits of glass, swiftly will his armies march to me. I shall remain bare and in dreams await his coming. The play of the water fascinates me."

Blandishing, Torres entered the sleeping chamber, crept back to steal a glimpse of the Queen, and saw her sunk down on the platform, hand in hand, and gazing into the whirlpool. Swiftly he made his way to the chest, lifted the lid, and stowed a handful into his trousers' pocket. Ere he could scoop a second handful, the mocking laughter of the Queen was at his back.

Fear and more potent drink to such extent that he sprang toward her, and pursuing her out upon the platform, was only prevented from seizing her by the dagger she threatened him with.

"Thief," she said quietly. "Without honor are you. And the way of all thieves in this valley is death. I shall summon my spearmen and have you thrown into the whirling water."

And his serenity gave Torres cunning, glancing apprehensively at the water that threatened him, he ejaculated a cry of horror as if at what strange thing he had seen, sank down on one knee and buried his convulsed face of simulated fear in his hands. The Queen looked sidewys to see what he had seen. Which was his moment. He rose in the air upon her like a leaping tiger, clutching her wrists and wresting the dagger from her.

He wiped the sweat from his face and trembled while he slowly recovered himself. Meanwhile she gazed upon him curiously without fear.

They Came to Grips

"You are a woman of evil," he snarled at her, still shaking with rage; "a wrinkled trafficker with devilish things. Yet are you woman, born woman, and therefore mortal. The weakness of mortality give you now your choice of two things. Either you shall be thrown into the whirl of water and perish, or—"

"Or" she prompted.

"Or—" He paused, licked his dry lips and burst forth. "No! By the Mother of God, I am not afraid. Or marry me this day, which is the other choice."

"You would marry me for myself, or for the treasure?"

"For the treasure," he admitted brazenly.

"But it is written in the Book of Life that I shall marry Francis," she objected.

"When will we rewrite that page in the Book of Life?"

"As if it could be done!" she laughed.

"Then I will prove your mortality there in the whirl whither I shall fling you as you flung the flowers."

Truly intrepid Torres was for the time—intrepid because of the ancient drink, that burned in his blood and brain, and because he was master of the situation. Also, like a true Latin-American, he loved a scene wherein he could strut and elocute.

Yet she startled him by emitting a hiss similar to the Latin way of calling a servitor. He regarded her suspiciously, glanced at the door way to the sleeping chamber, then returned his gaze to her.

Like a ghost, seeing it only vaguely out of the corner of his eye, the great white hound erupted through the doorway. Startled again, Torres involuntarily stepped to one side. But his foot failed to close in rest on the emptiness of air it encountered, and the weight of his body toppled him down off the platform into the water. And, as he fell and screamed his despair, he saw the hound in midair leaping after him.

Swimmer that he was, Torres was like a straw in the grip of the current, and the Lady Who Dreams, gazing down upon him fascinated from the edge of the platform, saw him disappear, and the hound after him, into the heart of the whirlpool from which there was no return.

CHAPTER XX.

LONG the lady who dreams gazed down at the playing waters.

At last, with a sighed "My poor dog," she arose. The passing of Torres had meant nothing to her. Accustomed from girlhood to exercise the high powers of life and death over her semi-savage and degenerate people, human life, per se, had no sacredness to her.

If life were good and lovely, then, naturally, it was the right thing to let it alive. But if life were evil, ugly and dangerous to other lives, then the thing was to let it die or make it die. This, to her, Torres had been an episode—unpleasant, but quickly over. But it was too bad about the dog.

Clapping her hands loudly as she entered her chamber, to summon one of her women, she made sure that the lid of the jewel chest was raised. To the woman she gave a command, and herself returned to the platform, where she could look into the room unobserved.

A few minutes later, guided by the woman, Francis entered the chamber and was left alone. He was not in a happy mood. Fine as had been his giving up of Leoncia, he got no pleasure from the deed. Nor was there any pleasure in looking forward to marrying the strange lady who ruled over the lost souls and resided in this weird lake dwelling.

Unlike Torres, however, she did not arouse in him fear or animosity. Quite to the contrary, Francis' feeling toward her was largely that of pity. He could not help but be impressed by the tragic pathos of the ripe and lovely woman desperately seeking love and a mate, despite her imperious and cavalier methods.

At a glance he recognized the room for what it was and idly wondered if he were already considered the bridegroom, sans discussion, sans acquaintance, sans ceremony. In his brown study the chest scarcely caught his attention. The Queen, watching, saw him evidently waiting for her and, after a few minutes, walk over to the chest.

He gathered up a handful of gems, dropped them one by one carelessly back as if they had been so many marbles, and turned and strolled over to examine the leopard skins on her couch.

Next he sat down upon it, oblivious equally of couch or treasure. All of which was provocative of such delight to the Queen that she could no longer withstrain herself to mere spying. Entering the room and greeting him, she laughed:

"Was Senor Torres a liar?"

"Was!" Francis queried, for the need of saying something, as he arose before her.

"He no longer is," she assured him. "Which is neither here nor there," she hastened on as Francis began to betray interest in the matter of Torres' end. "He is gone, and it is well that he is gone, for he can never come back. But he did lie, didn't he?"

"Undoubtedly," Francis replied. "He is a confounded liar."

He could not help noticing the way her face fell when he so heartily agreed with her concerning Torres' veracity.

"What did he say?" Francis questioned.

"That he was the one selected to marry me."

"A liar," Francis commented dryly.

"Next he said that you were the selected one—which was also a lie," her voice trailed off.

Francis shook his head.

The involuntary cry of joy the Queen uttered touched his heart to such tenderness of pity that almost did he put his arms around her to soothe her. She waited for him to speak.

"I am the one to marry you," he went on steadily. "You are very beautiful. When shall we be married?"

The wild joy in her face was such that he swore to himself that never would he willingly mar that face with marks of sorrow. She might be ruler over the Lost Souls, with the wealth of Ind and with supernatural powers of mirror gazing; but most poignantly she appealed to him as a lonely and native woman, overspilling of love and totally unversed in love.

"And I shall tell you of another lie this Torres animal told me," she burst forth exultantly. "He told me that you were rich, and that, before you married me, you desired to know what wealth was mine. He told me you had sent him to inquire into what riches I possessed. This I know was a lie. You are not marrying me for that"—with a scornful gesture at the jewel case.

Francis shook his head.

"You are marrying me for myself," she rushed on in triumph.

"For yourself," Francis could not help but lie.

And then he beheld an amazing thing. The Queen, this Queen who was the sheerest autocrat, who said come here and go there, who dismissed the death of Torres with its mere announcement, and who selected her royal spouse without so much as consulting his pre-nuptial wishes, this Queen began to blush. Up her cheek, flooding her face to her ears and forehead, welled the pink tide of maidenly modesty and embarrassment.

And such sight of faltering made Francis likewise falter. He knew not what to do, and felt a warmth of blood rising under the sun-tan of his own face. Never, he thought, had there been a man and woman situation like it in all the history of men and women. The mutual embarrassment of the pair of them was appalling, and to save his life he could not have summoned a jot of initiative. Thus, the Queen was compelled to speak first.

How Shall I Select My Wife?

ALL men are attracted by beauty. But all men know that beauty alone is not a safe guide, in choosing a wife. What, then, is a safe guide?

The Boston American invites its masculine readers to send in their ideas on this question.

A prize of $25 will be awarded for the letter which, in the opinion of the judge, embodies the clearest and most unbiased answer. For the letter adjudged second best $10 will be awarded, and for the letter adjudged third best $5.

The decisions will be made by Beatrice Fairfax.

Confine your letter to 200 words. Write on one side of the paper only and give your name and address.

The contest closes Saturday noon, June 28. Winners will be announced during the week of July 7.

Address letters to Boston American Magazine Page, No. 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

Novel Written Just Before Famous Author's Death One of His Best

Man Expects Much of the Ideal Modern Wife of Today

WHAT is the ideal modern wife? The American publishes today some of the answers to this important question, submitted in the prize contest by men readers.

The winning letters will be announced later in the week and will then be reprinted.

With announcement of the successful contestants, a check for $25 will be sent to the winner of the first prize, $10 to the second and $5 to the third.

Other letters will be published each day. Watch for them and see if you can pick the winners.

Once more the editor is obliged to remind readers that many of the letters submitted were too long. Any letter more than 200 words in length is debarred from the prize winning class, although some of these are so good that they are being published among those deserving of honorable mention.

The editor regrets the necessity of barring excellent letters, but has no choice, when there is a breach of the rules. The word limit is plainly printed in the announcement of each contest, and contestants are warned to count their words before sending in manuscripts.

The first letter published today is from a returned soldier.

Soldier's Ideals Are Changed

"Shall I be more critical in my search for a wife? You can just bet I shall! Why? Because men don't fight their way through hell and come out of it with the same namby-pamby ideals they started with.

"Some went into the war boys and came out men; snobs came out democrats; timid men became courageous creatures; and all learned the ability. Now what will these men expect to see in the girls they loved before they followed the colors? The boy, for instance, who comes back a man—will he still want to marry his little girl sweetheart? Well, if he does it's because she, too, has suffered many long, dark hours and has become as sweet a woman as she was girl.

"Girls must get a bigger and broader outlook of life than they ever had before. But no one can expect a man to come back, changed as he is bound to be, and not hoping to find more mobility and character in his sweetheart. The girls of today have got to measure up—and thank God, most of them are doing it! "J. G., Boston."

"An ideal wife—who can find one?

"For in theory every man cherisheth one ideal, yet in practice he pursueth another. In his heart he crieth:

"Send me, O Fate, a companionable wife. A wife who loveth me enough to make me comfortable, but not so much as to make me uncomfortable. A wife who is strong enough to take care of herself, but not too strong to enjoy being taken care of.

"A wife who is sentimental enough to be tender and kissable, but not so sentimental as to smother me with devotion. A wife who can caress me with one hand while she busieth me with the other. A wife who can hand me bouquets with one hand while she holdeth my conceit down with the other. A wife who will my virtues and loveth me for them; who meeth my faults and loveth me in spite of them.

"A wife who is child, mother, pal, yoke-mate and play-mate.

"Thus saith every man in his heart, but he goeth forth to be tripped up in a yard of pink baby ribbon and awaketh to find himself tied for life to a giggle and a purple bathing suit.

The Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaelis

OH, the ad was so alluring that it seemed a fairy tale and its words, most reassuring, banished care from earth's glad vale. "This apartment," so it stated, "is a light and airy place; all the plumbing's silver-plated; it has lots of closet space. Decorations are exquisite and it gets the Southern breeze.

Come and give the rooms a visit, for they cannot fail to please. It's the place for which you're pining; once in here you'll never roam; cost and comfort we're combining in this ideal home."

When the Tired Movers, skimming page by page such cheerful ad, found these words with promise brimming, do you reckon they were glad? Mr. Tired Mover, hastily, flopped into a taxicab, for he said: "We mustn't waste a chance this paragon to grab." And he found the landlord waiting, and he found the place a dream, with its breeze and silver-plating and its rental and its steam.

Then said he: "I want to get it; but, I play the violin." Said the landlord: "No, forget it. Any day you may move in." "But my wife's a barefoot dancer. Would the neighbors kick on that?" Said the landlord: "Here's the answer. Neighbors do not run this flat!" Mr. Tired Mover, quaking, said: "A little son have I"—Now the janitor is taking out the fragments of that guy.

Nothing of Moment

The front door bell rang, and seven-year-old Nancy answered. Presently she returned alone.

"Who was it, dear?" asked her mother.

"Oh, it was just a lady looking for the wrong house," was the unconcerned reply.

The Menace of Cancer

By Brice Belden, M. D.

THE importance of the cancer problem is revealed by reliable statistics, which show that one woman in eight and one man in fourteen over forty years of age die of cancer.

Cancer spares no race and social position has no effect upon its coming. Because of its attacks upon rich and poor alike and because of its universality as regards different races, it has been called the common enemy of mankind.

By some pessimists it is thought that cancer is destined to supplant tuberculosis as a scourge, but it is more than likely that modern medical science will avert such a calamity.

No Pain at Start

Cancer in its beginning is a local disease; hence the vast importance of its early recognition and extirpation. All hope of cure rests in the prompt diagnosis and proper surgical treatment of the disease. Cancer in the later stages is practically never cured.

Cancer is most apt to begin at some point which has long been subjected to local irritation. In the very early stages there is usually no pain, but as the growth advances pain usually becomes a prominent symptom.

External cancer is likely to start from a wart, mole, old sore or scar. Irritation of the tongue by a defective tooth, or of the lip by a hot pipe, when long continued, may initiate the growth.

Symptoms of Cancer

Internal cancer is apt to show symptoms before a lump can be seen or felt. Persistent indigestion, with loss of weight and color, is suggestive of cancer, and should always prompt an investigation.

There is a peculiar hardness about the feel of most cancers which is most distinctive. Any hard lump appearing upon the body should be examined by a physician and a diagnosis made, if possible before pain begins.

If a portion of a suspicious lump is removed for the purpose of diagnosis and it turns out to be cancer immediate radical removal must follow, as the seeding of a cancerous growth causes its dissemination locally and in remote parts of the body.

The Cult of Fashion

Young lady at the theatre to friend: "What do you think of this play, my dear?" "Why, it's absurd! Three months are supposed to pass between the first and second acts, and the heroine's still got the same hat on!"

Attractive Aprons

By Rita Stuyvesant

APRONS large and aprons small, aprons pretty, or not at all, is the slogan for this season. A pretty apron will impart to a woman that homely loveliness so much admired by the male sex.

Clever indeed are the new coverall aprons. Chambray and English printed gingham are the favored fabrics, but checked ginghams will always hold a high place with the "old-timy" type of housewife.

Large bungalow aprons that can be worn as house dresses are very popular and can be made up quickly at home. Short kimono sleeves and a square neck are the distinguishing features of these models, which are generally buttoned on the left side from shoulder to hem. Banding about an inch wide in white linen is the only trimming and is used to outline the sleeves, neck and front closing.

Many women like a belt of self material with this coverall apron, and of course one must not forget to add the ever-useful pocket. Old blue chambray is neat, bound in white, while the "English prints" are very quaint, trimmed with harmonizing colors.

Tea-time aprons are charmingly dainty this season, with their delicate beauty of laces and ribbons.

Pale tinted voiles make up into exceptionally smart aprons for afternoon wear.

"BUT I am sure it was not one of those regular sailor-suits that he wore. There was no white braid about it—or I would have noticed that. And I think his things fitted tightly."

"Probably he has his commission by now and wears an officer's uniform," the host suggested. "That would account for his being in New York—I mean his being in the navy would account for it. He may be on the transport which is in New York, and he may have a few days ashore. He sails tomorrow, you say?"

"Yes—I think that is what he said. You never met him, my dear, so you?" Mrs. Leighton questioned, turning to Desiree.

Changes Topic

"No. I never did."

"So he said," the spinster informed her.

Desiree flushed. "How did he happen to mention that fact to you?" she demanded.

"Oh, in the course of our conversation I remarked that I was coming here tonight and reminded him that you had been a favorite of his aunt's. He said he had never called on you when you were in Baltimore."

"No—nor when he has been here." Desiree supplemented stiffly. "I am not particularly anxious to meet him—certainly not anxious enough ever to suggest his coming to my house."

Here Mrs. Duffield hastily introduced another topic of conversation. She feared that Desiree might make some remark that was derogatory to a young man whom Miss Bristol evidently liked.

After supper, when her guests had gone into the drawing room, Desiree slipped out into the hall for a word alone with her father.

"Dad," she said, "you really should give Smith a few points in manners. I was surprised at the way he behaved this evening. I saw him myself get into the car and sit there while Norah opened the door and helped Miss Bristol out and then brought her up the front steps into the house."

Norah Overheard All

"That's strange!" Mr. Leighton commented. "I always thought Smith's manners were exceptionally good."

"So did I. But they were bad tonight. He came here, rang the bell for Norah—then caught her by the arm and ran down the steps with her."

"He may have wanted a chance for a chat with your pretty maid," Leighton opined. "Most chauffeurs flirt with the maids, I suppose."

Desiree frowned. "I will not allow it!" she declared.

Her father looked surprised. "Don't get so excited over a trifle, my dear. I will explain to Smith what his duties are—or you can do so."

"One of us must," the girl insisted. "He behaved abominably tonight."

Then she rejoined her guests in the drawing room, without suspecting that Norah, concealed by the sliding room portieres, had overheard the entire conversation.

EDITORIAL PAGE OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN JUNE 23, 1919 BOSTON.

Mothers' Benefit Bill Before Senate Today

Miss Edna Lawrence Spencer of Cambridge suggests the following editorial on the Mothers' Benefit Bill on which the State Senate will vote today. It is a good editorial on the subject and the American adopts it:

"No one has yet solved the mystery of what life is, but scientists are learning more each year as to its preservation and protection.

"Nothing is more vital to the welfare of the race than the care of the expectant mother and her child, yet here in Massachusetts, the birthplace of so much that is best in progressive legislation, we leave to chance care and the cold hand of charity those mothers who have insufficient means to meet the needs of maternity.

"Today the Senate will vote upon the so-called Maternity Benefits Bill, Senate 612, which, if enacted into law, will remedy this shameful situation, and give an added claim to progressive leadership to our Old Bay State.

"The Senate should rise to this opportunity; we believe that it will do so.

"No man having a spark of sentiment, a touch of idealism, a particle of imagination, could vote against this bill; the man of practical common sense is bound to vote for it.

"The economic loss to the State of our tremendous maternal mortality and invalidism caused by lack of care is enormous; the saving in dollars and cents through legislation remedying this situation would be many times the cost; therefore, from the standpoint of economy alone the measure should be passed without delay.

"We no longer, however, think in terms of dollars and cents only. The great world war has given to all people a new vision; the very prodigality with which life has been sacrificed has given to it a greater value, a value which property can never attain; human rights is no longer an empty phrase, but a phrase with which to conjure.

"The people of Massachusetts imbued with this new spirit of the times are solidly behind the bill for Maternity Benefits; the Senate of the State should be responsive to this spirit; if it is, the bill will pass."

A Monkey at Washington and Summer Streets

He Could Take Back to Apeland a More Interesting Story Than Professor Garner Brings From the Congo

Copyright, 1918, Star Company.

Professor R. L. Garner, Ambassador Extraordinary to Monkeydom, has returned to America bringing with him the dead body of what he says is the highest developed species of the man-animal, a cross between a gorilla and a chimpanzee.

This ape, in its wild state, is said by Mr. Garner to acquire voluntarily some of the words which are spoken by the Congo natives. Very improbable.

Professor Garner's visits to the French Congo regions and his intermittent study of ape life and language have covered a period of more than a quarter of a century.

As a result of his observations he says that he is convinced there is no such thing as a "missing link" between the animal kingdom and man.

Mr. Garner has carried on his jungle investigations while living in a cage made of heavy iron bars to protect him from the attack of wild animals. From this safe retreat he says he has studied the habits and investigated the customs of the animals without alarming them. He reports that he is bringing back with him a great number of phonographic records of the sounds of the jungle, but that he was unable to successfully operate a motion picture machine.

Interesting as Mr. Garner's investigation may prove, it would be altogether more entertaining if we could find out what the monkeys would think of us if they could have the same opportunity of investigation that Mr. Garner established.

Suppose that one of this race of apes of which Mr. Garner brings the first word could give a thought to Washington street by establishing himself in a secure and comfortable cage at the corner of Summer street.

After a day there what sort of a report do you think he would take back to his Congo Society for the Investigation of Kula Kambas, which is Congoese for "the thing which talks"?

In the first place he would say: "Everybody there stays on the ground. Nobody climbs about as we do. They have no trees because they have cut them down, and in their place put up high buildings, and when they want to go up in the buildings they ride instead of walk. They will shortly lose their legs as they lost their tails, through failure to use them."

He would recite that he saw one man working for another, and in some cases hundreds of men doing the bidding of one.

Our Washington street investigator would also report that the people wrapped their bodies up in strange and wonderful things they called clothes. That some of the women wore skirts so tight that they could hardly step and that some of the men covered their heads with tall, round boxes, made of some shiny, silky substance.

If he attempted to carry back samples of the language he heard he would report that about one-fourth of the communication was made by means of nine words which were: And, Be, Have, It, Of, The, To, Will, You.

That, in addition to these nine, the spoken language was largely composed of thirty-four other words, which were: About, All, As, At, But, Can, Come, Day, Dear, For, Get, Go, Hear, Her, If, In, Me, Much, Not, On, One, Say, She, So, That, There, They, This, Though, Time, We, With, Write, Your.

He would also say that the most frequent sound he heard was not really a word, but the constant repetition of one letter, the letter "I."

It would be an extraordinary and interesting story he would tell, all familiar enough to us, all strange to the monkeys.

And he would probably conclude his lecture by saying: "Be thankful, my dear friends, that you are monkeys living in a fine cocoanut grove and not human beings."

More Truth Than Poetry

THE GREAT LEVELER

By S. E. KISER

The war has removed all social distinctions between comrades.
—John Grier Hibben, President of Princeton University

HAVE you noticed Captain Sherman's
Fond regard for Private Brown?
When they went to lick the Germans
One was up, the other down;
They were birds of different feather,
Seeking pleasure far apart:
War has brought the two together,
They are brothers now, at heart!

COLONEL RICHARD HENRY BONNER
Would have once been disinclined
To hobnob with Sergeant Connor,
But the war has changed his mind.
No more social gulfs between them,
No distinctions to divide:
You undoubtedly have seen them
Strolling proudly side by side.

MAJOR WHITWORTH finds it pleasant
To converse with Private Grubb,
And the private is at present
Living at the Major's club.
They have turned from old conventions,
Caste is something they abhor;
Once, perhaps, they had pretentions,
But they've dropped them since the war.

All, but wait, dear friends and brothers,
Till their wives or sweethearts meet—
Or their sisters or their mothers—
All most lovable and sweet;
Wait until they come together;
They, without expecting thanks,
Will be quick to show us whether
War has leveled all the ranks.

By K. C. B.

MY DEAR K. C. B.—I read your story about the little girl and her grandma and the little mouse, and it made me cry. For over forty years ago when I was a cub lawyer in the wild and woolly West where we all carried guns, one cold Winter night I was studying alleged law, very cold and lonesome and homesick, and a little mouse came out and I welcomed him, and in a week he'd eat wheat and cheese off the toe of my boot and then he'd sit up and comb out his whiskers with his fore paws and chirp a little song that had some of the notes that a canary bird has. And I wasn't lonesome any more and we were both very happy, and I reckon I'd have gunplayed anybody who tried to hurt that mouse.

Don't you think if you would tell this to that terrible grandpa that he might come and take away the trap so that grandma could let the mouse in again and make it a "foursome," and they'd all be very happy, especially the little girl and the little mouse? C. L. D.

DEAR CLARENCE.

* * *

AS A matter of fact.

IF THAT terrible grandpa.

WHO SET out the trap.

TO CATCH the little mouse.

THAT WAS entertaining Jane.

HAD HIS own way about it.

* * *

HE WOULDN'T worry at all.

* * *

AND IF he lived by himself.

AND HE hadn't any neighbors.

AND HADN'T any callers.

IT'S MORE than likely.

* * *

THAT IF the mice came around.

* * *

HE'D TAKE them all in.

AND PROBABLY train them.

TO DO a lot of tricks.

BUT LIVING as he does.

* * *

HE MUST drive them away.

* * *

AS YOU and I must do.

BECAUSE A long time ago.

THAT THE little brown mouse,

WAS A nasty little thing.

* * *

AND A vicious little thing.

AND MUST therefore be a pest.

AND EVER since then.

WE'VE BEEN making war on him.

* * *

AND MY opinion is,

THAT GOD sent us the mouse.

JUST TO teach untidy persons.

TO CLEAN up their houses.

AND PUT their things away.

WHERE THEY'LL all be nice and clean.

AND THE mice can't get at them.

AND INSTEAD of starving cats.

SO THEY'LL go and catch the mice.

WHY WE'LL starve the mice away.

* * *

AND WE are doing that.

AND THE cat is getting fat.

AND THE mice have gone away.

I WANT to ask you.

* * *

WHAT WOULD you do.

IF YOU stepped on a mouse.

IN YOUR bare feet?

WOULDN'T YOU die?

* * *

I DID it once.

* * *

AND IT stunted my growth.

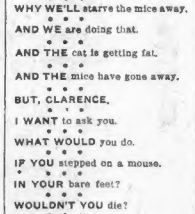
FOR TWO years.



I THANK you.

THE NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS SEEN IN A NEW LIGHT

By Garrett P. Serviss

THE grandest of all scientific speculations is undoubtedly the Nebular Hypothesis, best known to the general public in the form given to it by the great French mathematician Laplace. The question of how the world began, or was created, has always held the first rank in the human mind. That is why every great religion has its cosmogony, or account of the origin of all things. The Hebrew cosmogony imposingly outlined in the first five verses of the Book of Genesis, contains in one sentence, dimly descriptive of the state of affairs at the beginning, "And the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep," the thought-germ of the Nebular Hypothesis.

The wonderful germ inspired the imagination of Buffon and of Kant. But Buffon was a naturalist and Kant was a metaphysician, and it was not until the seed fell in the more suitable soil of a great mathematician's brain that it produced shapely fruit. That fruit was Laplace's Nebular Hypothesis.

Fascinated Scientists

For the better part of a century the great Hypothesis stood almost unchallenged. It was as simple in its outlines as it was magnificent in its sweep. It made the reader see, rising out of, or in place of, the cloudy conceptions of Genesis, a distinct and a progressively developing shape, whose vastness overwhelmed the imagination, although there was nothing mysterious about it. First appeared an expanded mass of nebulous matter, whose central condensation was destined to become the sun. As the mass rotated and contracted, it left off rings of matter which subsequently broke, gathered into globular masses, cooled off, and so at last became planets.

The overmastering appeal which this hypothesis made to almost every one was largely due to the fact that it had no complications. Once the cooling and contracting nebula was set in rotation everything else followed as a matter of course—the central mass aggregating into a sun, the rings, and consequently the planets, all revolving the same way, the sun rotating in the same direction as that of the planetary revolutions, etc. In a word, it made the solar system as comprehensive as a watch. The Hypothesis was fascinating in its simple beauty, and it became queen in the realm of cosmogonic speculation. Not only astronomy bowed to it, but geology paid it reverence, and the whole domain of science lay, more or less, under its sovereignty.

But in recent years shattering blows have been aimed at the great Hypothesis. Some think it has been demolished. Others believe it has only been shown to be imperfect but not fundamentally wrong. But the most inspiring of these recent speculations comes from the English mathematician, J. H. Jeans. He suggests that Laplace's theory is "at the same time a failure and a splendid success—failure as regards the immediate purpose for which it was designed; splendid in having achieved a success greater than any its author could possibly have dreamed of."

What Jeans means may be understood from the statement that the spiral nebulae, which were unknown in Laplace's day, appear to answer, in their strange forms and movements, to the mathematical requirements of Laplace's theory. Or as Jeans says: "It must be admitted that Laplace's fundamental ideas, when developed mathematically to their logical conclusion, shows a striking capacity for interpreting many if not most of the formations observed in the sky."

How Laplace Erred

At the same time it appears that: "The only formation which Laplace's Hypothesis now seems definitely unable to explain is, paradoxically enough, just that particular one which it was specially created to explain—namely, the solar system. Laplace's intuition and his mathematical ideas were wonderfully accurate, but he was led into a faulty application of them."

SPENDS ONLY TIME, BUT FREE WITH THAT

By Mrs. Wilson Woodrow

"CAN you tell a girl what to do with a man who calls and calls and CALLS on her, but who so rarely invites her out that when he does it almost takes her breath away?"

That is the piteous plea that has come to me in this morning's mail. It is not an unusual complaint; I have received many of similar tenor.

For that matter, I don't suppose there is a woman in the world, not even excluding Thackeray's repellant damsel with the hump and the mole on the end of her nose, who has not at some time suffered the infliction of one of these "canny Charlies."

Thrift and economy are of course undeniable and praiseworthy virtues, but they have never ranked very high as weapons of Cupid. Romeo must not count the change.

Yet that does not mean that a man must be a spendthrift and a prodigal in order to capture a girl's fancy. The woman of today is a reasonable being with a pretty clear idea of values. There are few of them—even to the empty-headed little "flappers" and the most calculating "vamps"—who will urge a man they care anything about to spend more than he can afford. In marriage the wife is almost always the conservator and the economist.

The American woman, however, has a strong sense of justice; and if she is denied those little attentions in the way of flowers, candy and amusement which are a recognized feature of courtship she rightly feels that she is being cheated.

It seems to me that the correspondent whose question I quoted in the beginning has a distinctly legitimate grievance. Listen to her story.

The Original Tightwad

For a year and a half a young man of her acquaintance has been an habitual caller at her house, presenting himself there on an average of one or two evenings out of every week.

He has told her that he loves her and wishes to make her his wife, and although she has declined him again and again, will not give up hope that he may induce her to change her mind.

"I would not complain," she writes, "if he were without means or down on his luck; but he has an excellent position and a really handsome income. Certainly he does not stint when it comes to spending money on himself, and everything he buys in that way is of the best. He wears only the most expensive clothes and haberdashery, and smokes the highest-priced cigarettes on the market.

"I like him very much," she confesses. "He is well-educated, has had the advantage of travel, is of unimpeachable character, and is attractive in every way. But his stinginess has always prevented me from falling in love with him."

Time to Do Something

As my correspondent rightly divines, a man of that sort is a poor prospect for a husband. The drunkard may be cured, the rake reformed, the spendthrift brought to see the error of his ways; but the self-indulgent prig who balks at spending a penny on any one else is almost beyond redemption.

A frank talk may produce results in some instances. While the man is still eager to marry her let the girl lay down the law to him. Let her say:

"You are using my house as a convenience. Light, heat, the comforts you enjoy here, all cost money. If you were a member of a club you would have to pay for the privileges you received. If you were to go to a bar-room, restaurant, even to the lobby of a hotel, your presence would not be tolerated long unless you showed some inclination to come across. Now, in fairness, I demand that you reciprocate to some extent for the entertainment that is accorded you here."

If that does not work, and he still shows a disposition to sponge, there is but one recourse—the skids. The next time that he calls let him be told gently but firmly that you "are not at home."
